Virginia Beach receives award

VIRGINIA BEACH—City Manager Thomas Muehlenbeck recently received notification by the Government Finance Officers Association, awarding the City of Virginia Beach their award for Distinguished Budget Presentation. This award is the highest form of recognition in governmental budgeting.

Attainment of the award represents a significant accomplishment by City management and elected officials of Virginia Beach. To receive the award, governments submit their budget documents for review by a panel of independent budget experts, using extensive criteria. The reviewers evaluate the effectiveness of the budget in four categories. They are: as a policy document, operations guide, financial plan and a communications document. To receive the award, the budget document must be rated "proficient" in each of these four categories.

VIRGINIA BEACH—Bench delegate W. R. "Buster" O'Brien, an attorney who used to chase the American dream through college and into the House of Delegates of the Virginia General Assembly, formally declared his candidacy for the position of Attorney General of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The 38-year old father of three, announced his decision in press conferences held Monday across the state, culminating in an announcement in his native city of Virginia Beach.

"Both in the practice of law and during three terms in the House of Delegates," said O'Brien, "I have become convinced that our state requires firm leadership from the office of the attorney general.

"Virginia's Attorney General is our top law enforcement official. The attorney general must be qualified, fair, and impartial."

"I know the statistics tell us that crime is dropping. But too often the overall decline in crime rates hides increases in some violent crimes. And the overall rate makes little difference if you, See O'BRIEN, page 3

Cox prosecution dropped

VIRGINIA BEACH—Commonwealth's Attorney Paul A. Sciortino has dropped the obscenity case against Cox Cable of Virginia Beach, Inc.

At a Tuesday afternoon press conference, called to announce the dismissal of the suit, Sciortino said that no purpose would be served by trying the suit now that Cox Cable has removed the Playboy Channel from its program's offerings.

The case, if pursued, he said, would have cost the city a considerable amount of money and would serve only to "exact some sort of vengeance in making Cox Cable of Virginia Beach, Inc. a corporate criminal."

The Commonwealth Attorney's office became involved when the city council requested the office to conduct an investigation into whether the programming on the Playboy Channel was obscene as defined by Virginia Statutes and by the U.S. Supreme Court.

After reviewing the programming content, Sciortino said he showed nine of the films to a Grand Jury, which returned seven true bills against Cox Cable for this misdemeanor of distribution of materials. The litigation was scheduled for trial by jury on May 7.

Cox Communications of Atlanta, the parent company of Cox Cable, Virginia Beach and Cox Cable Tidewater, last week eliminated the channel from its offerings in Virginia Beach, Norfolk and Portsmouth.

This move took him off guard Sciortino said. He pointed out that the punishment for the misdemeanor was a maximum fine of $1,000 per violation.

If the office proceeded with the litigation, it would involve expense for taxpayers and require the service of two attorneys from his office, Sciortino said.

Sciortino said an obscenity statute is the only criminal statute which determines that a crime was or was not committed, based upon local community standards.

Falling resort business

needs immediate attention

VIRGINIA BEACH—The City of Virginia Beach is in great shape financially.

By the end of the fiscal year on June 30, Mayor Harold Heischberger said Monday, the city is looking for a $50 million surplus, that is, an undersigned fund balance.

And it is well on its way. The interim financial statement for the period ending Jan. 31 released Monday afternoon showed an excess of $16.9 million in revenues over expenditures. Add to that the $24 million left in the Operating Budget in undersigned funds balance and the balance already is $40.9 million with five months to go.

The only area which isn't measuring up to expectations, Heischberger said, is the tourist industry. Although the private sector's investment in tourism represented an eight percent growth over the previous year, he said, the increase in revenues was only three percent. The increase should have been 13 percent just to break even, he said, taking the eight percent investment and the cost-of-living increase. In contrast, he said, Myrtle Beach showed an increase of 12 percent and Ocean City, 13 percent.

To Heischberger, this means that it's time to get the resort area rehabilitation project going. He said that the lack of reinvestment by the city is taking its toll.

The city started the current fiscal year with an $38 million surplus of which $10 million was used in the operating budget and the remainder retained in the undersigned fund balance. Of that $4 million was spent on unbudgeted items, leaving the $24 million.

When the Operating Budget is prepared this year, some of the $50 million will be used to balance the 1985-86 budget but part can be set aside for roads and for the target areas, Heischberger said.

Water, sewer, roads, street lights and rehabilitation in the target (low-income) areas are provided by Community Development funds. However, Heischberger said, if the city can put additional money into the projects, they will be completed more quickly.

A dying art

Lecture given on figureheads

VIRGINIA BEACH—Who were the people or animals prominently displayed on the bows of ships? What meaning or history did they represent to the ship owner? The Virginia Beach Maritime Historical Museum, with a grant from the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities, recently presented Carol Olsen of Texas A&M University to answer these questions.

Although ship carving has become a dying art in the 20th century, many people still take pride in the decoration of their boats. Paintings, drawings, and simple wooden plaques have replaced the more ornate carvings of the past, but the reasons for their being prominently displayed on boats remain the same. Just like the ancient mariners who believed a bare-breasted or naked woman could calm a storm at sea, present day mariners decorate their boats to give them safe passage, good fishing or just plain good luck.

To Olsen, ship figureheads were a reflection of the artistic taste of the maritime culture they represented; consequently, there were many regional distinctions. As figureheads were studied and dated, it became evident that they were an exciting way to look at history, for they represented the social, economic, political, and artistic climate of the time.

Olsen's wealth of knowledge of figureheads was revealed in some of the stories about their history. Olsen was personally involved in identifying the figurehead of Belva Lockwood, who was the first woman nominated as a candidate for the presidency of the U.S., by the Equal Rights Party in 1884.

Another figurehead that reflected the political climate of the time was the one of Andrew Jackson on the U.S.S. Constitution. As the story went, some people were not pleased with Jackson, so the figurehead was guarded around the clock. Under the cover of night, a man named Dewey rowed his boat up to the bow of the ship and sawed Jackson's head off—a very overt political statement.

A tall order for just one day! But it can all be accomplished by taking part in the first annual Easter Seal Bike-A-Thon being sponsored by the Tidewater Optimist Club and K-94. Tidewater area REACT Clubs will be available for assistance with traffic control and communications.

Starting at 10 a.m. at locations in seven Tidewater cities, registration will begin for a 30 Kilometer Bike-A-Thon. Bikers can peddle as individuals, families, or teams representing a club, business or organization to support the efforts of the Easter Seal Program of Tidewater.

By contacting sponsors interested in contributing minimum of 25¢ per kilometer the biker completes, participants can help raise the money needed to continue community services and also compete for prizes.

Area businesses have generously contributed added incentives for those involved. A one week trip for two in the Pocono Mountains at "Fernwood" has been donated by Ahnert Enterprises; a one year membership at the Downtown Athletic Club in Norfolk contributed by the club; a video game machine from Beach Amusements; and a gold Seiko watch from J. Prosecuting Cox Cable Commonwealth's Attorney Paul A. Sciortino has announced his decision not to prosecute Cox Cable on several recent indictments charging the company with obscenity regarding films aired to cable TV subscribers on the Playboy cable channel.

While certainly a victory for weary Virginia Beach taxpayers, avoiding the spending of numerous hours by the City's attorneys in an effort to define community standards, man-hours which would total thousands of dollars in legal fees; a decision not to prosecute leaves only a murky question with no answer.

Was the law broken?

Did Cox Cable break the law? Were those films obscene?

An indictment does not presume guilt, only a trial for further legal disposition of an issue, or a trial.

The Commonwealth's Attorney should reassure the citizens of Virginia Beach that if indeed Community standards were violated a simple "I won't do it again," certainly implied in Cox's decision to drop Playboy, will not suffice.

Have the voters won or lost?

If a crime was not committed, if the movies were not obscene, then a strange thing has happened in our midst. A small, vocal group of voters has caused a great financial institution to bend, forfeiting many thousands of dollars in potential profit; manipulated a public office to their own end and left a worrisome question in many minds as to what they can do next.

Merely testing the waters?—S.M.

Beach clout

The recent announcement by Delegate W. R. O'Brien that he intends to campaign for the Republican nomination for the state's attorney general job, coupled with the recurring mention of Delegate Owen Pickett's name in Democratic circles as a potential standardbearer for everything from a U.S. Senate seat to lieutenant governor of Virginia should point out to Virginia Beach citizens of both the Republican and Democratic persuasions that Beach politicians and political clout are finally coming of age.

Regardless of political affiliation, Beach residents should take heart from these political excursions into the power realms and realize that the combined voting power and tax base Virginia Beach represents to the remainder of Virginia makes the City no orphan stepchild of Norfolk, nor any sleepy political backwater.

The party conventions are months away, and November elections even more distant, but there can be no doubt about the message Virginia Beach is sending the rest of the Commonwealth.

Virginia Beach has arrived and is ready to be reckoned with.—S.M.

Work smarter, not harder

A popular expression in the marketplace today is "Learn how to work smarter, not harder." Do you think it's possible?

In my day-to-day contacts with employers in local businesses and agencies, I often hear comments such as, "We installed this computer system to update the office, but so far, we haven't mastered how to use it." Or, "I know I devote far too much time to dictating my own letters, but I question if my support staff can do it themselves."

For those employers and interested readers of this column, help is on the way. There's a new approach to business survival and progress in the '80s which involves making the most of what you already have. The greatest single resource in any company is the people who already work

Letters To The Editor

Presidential politics and hokum

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

Hokum has achieved stature with the return of President Reagan to office.

Guided with patriotism and God, it is increasingly successful in marketing sweepstakes, fundamentalist television evangelists and the President himself.

Among evangelists, Oral Roberts uses it best, especially when he sells a paper outline of his famous healing right hand while promising instant cure or relief from pain if believers place the paper hands over that part of their bodies that is aching.

And the sweepstakes. Ah, yes, last year I won the fifth prize, the Black Star of India, in the annual $25,000 Cheeselovers International Sweepstakes, and had it appraised. It was worthless.

But the best practitioner of all is the President. In a letter to 18 million Americans not long ago he promised no miracles, only that those who joined his Republican Task Force for $120 would receive a membership card bearing "your toll-free, members-only, Washington hotline number... your superfast way to contact President Reagan and every Republican in the United States Senate."

Totally unbelievable. And tacky.

The other benefits of joining the Task Force, which he founded in 1981 to ensure the Republicans maintain a majority in the Senate, are slightly more acceptable. And laughable.

The benefits are spelled out in a brochure accompanying the President's letter soliciting Task Force memberships. Here they are:

Medal of Merit. "This unique, golden Medal of Merit is awarded only to Presidential Task Force Members, ensuring that its rarity and meaning will increase with the years... a beautiful and positive way to show you're working to make a better America."

Lapel Pin. "Wear this golden pin proudly to signify your special relationship with President Reagan."

Ceremonial Flag. "A unique, 3-by-5-foot American flag... symbol of your special love for America in our nation's Capitol building." (Copy for the brochure was written "in house" at the Task Force offices, accounting for the ruptured syntax.)

Honor Roll. "Your name will be inscribed on the President's Honor Roll and be kept forever with his permanent Presidential Papers. Perhaps someday your grandchildren or great-grandchildren will see your name linked historically with President Reagan himself on this rare document."

The New Force. "...a special insider's briefing on the real stories behind what's happening at the White House, on Capitol Hill and around the world... tell friends and neighbors the truth about major events."

Aside from outrageous claims, hokum is easily recognized by the frequency of usage of the words "unique" and "special" (too often to count in the Task Force brochure) but it has brought fame and millions of dollars to the evangelists and the sweepstakes sponsors and has made Ronald Reagan the most popular president in the nation's history.

Still, there should be some way to protect those people who are plunking down $120 for a Task Force membership card, expecting to pick up the telephone and chat with Ronald Reagan over a toll-free hotline.

It's been said before and it's worth saying again. Such huckstering cheapens the highest office in the land.

Coming to grips with a new world

This summer will be the four hundredth anniversary of the first English settlement in North America. What few first hand accounts still exist of the French and English colonies in America in the 1500's are collected in Stefan Loran's The New World. The experiences of the Roanoke colonists may have parallels in the new age we are now entering. Certainly their letters make fascinating reading.

John White is the main contributor to what we know about the Roanoke colony. He was governor of the second group of settlers of Roanoke, the first group having returned to England after a year. White's governorship was short as the colonists asked him to go home for more supplies. He was, however, at the colony long enough to celebrate the birth of his granddaughter, Virginia Dare. The next year it was impossible for him to return to America because England was fighting the Spanish Armada. By the time he could get another ship it was 1590 and the colonists had disappeared. Storms drove the relief expedition away before they could make a thorough search but in his writings White appears to believe the colonists were safe. It seems strange that with his family lost somewhere in America, White never came back to make another search.

All the narratives in The New World have reminders to how tenuous the connection to home must have seemed. Several different groups of colonists scrambled aboard a passing ship, believing they had been forgotten. The Roanoke settlers, totally out of touch for three years because of a war they weren't even aware was happening, must have suffered a frightening sense of abandonment.

The expectations the English investors had of their colony seem laughable today. Among other things it was hoped the

Notes on an elephant's ear

If the boys back home could only see me now, I remember thinking when The Girl on the Flying Trapeze called me on the telephone.

It wasn't a total surprise, after all. I mean I knew the circus was in town, and among the clowns, roustabouts, unicyclists and animal trainers I had interviewed for radio features was Rosa Segre, a third-generation aerial artist, a raven-haired 18-year old beauty who was The Girl on the Flying Trapeze.

Every year, slightly prior to the arrival of The Ringling Brothers-Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows, the three ring extravaganza that has been delighting audiences in the capitals of the world, as well as the provinces, Sue Rowand would provide me with a roster of personalities available for interviews.

Sue was the local advance man for the circus, still is for that matter, and it was because of her I was bowlegged for four days.

I was working in the news studio editing tape on a feature when Sue called and invited me to ride an elephant in the circus parade. "Everyone does it," she assured me. "You'll love it!"

The day of the great event dawned cold and rainy, a day not even an elephant would choose to take a stroll. The train was in however, and the animal parade lining up, so as a minor animal in the cast I threw on a leather jacket and made ready for what turned out to be a most unusual ride.

Ed's notes

By Samuel Martinette, Jr.

I should have known things were going to be fun when I turned out to be the only fool who showed up to ride. Be that as it may, I was there as Rahnhi the elephant, so we made our acquaintance and I hopped aboard, at the instruction of Gunter Gebel-Williams the animal trainer.

Do you know what you hold onto when you ride an elephant? Ears. Just ears.

Granted, the ears are big and the seat is broad, but brother let me tell you it was bouncy those first few yards!

Rahnhi was a tall pachyderm, given to close inspection of tree limbs and pickup trucks and the like, and each time she took a look around, my entire body would turn in the same direction.

"Don't worry if she stops when she sees a dog," the trainer alongside said at one point.

"Rahnhi's afraid of dogs, but we won't let her run away."

After we had bounced along Reigate Avenue for a while I began to be sure enough of my death's grip on Rahnhi's neck with my legs that I ventured a wave at the kids gathered along the route. After all, that was what I was there for. One hand clutching the elephant's ear, I sported a long grin and gave it my parade marshal best!

Now most of the people didn't have any idea who I was. I wasn't a tv newsman who they would recognize, only a radio guy. But this was my home neighborhood and every once in a while I would spot a friend, stricken with a sickly grin upon seeing me ride by.

Along we trotted to swelling crowds, ivy cameras and cheering children, with me riding third elephant, until at last we reached the intersection before Scope, whereupon all the elephants reared up but Rahnhi, who knelt gently down so I could pop off, bow to the crowd and walk across the street to work.

I was sitting in the newsroom, massaging my legs, which were to be stiff for four days (so some cowboys) when the interoffice terryphone rang and it was Rosa, The Girl on the Flying Trapeze.

Her feature had run that morning, a tidy little piece during which she had admitted if she weren't The Girl on the Flying Trapeze she would like to be an airline hostess, ending with a giggle. I played the story for her over the phone and she giggled again, thanking me and inviting me backstage to say hello when I came to the circus.

Well, I thought to myself, this job might not make you rich but it does have its points. And that's when I thought about the boys back home.

We face difficult choices in the years ahead. Protecting the rights of victims requires leadership throughout our criminal justice system.

O'Brien grew up in the Aragona section of Virginia Beach and first came to prominence as a high school All-American football player at Princess Anne High School. College ball followed, with a nationally televised appearance in the Liberty Bowl leading to a stint in pro football. Meanwhile O'Brien continued law studies at William & Mary.

After passing the Virginia Bar, O'Brien practiced private law until his election to the House of Delegates in 1979.

The official announcement of O'Brien's candidacy was no surprise, as he has been endorsed already by all seven major Republican candidates for statewide office, and appeared unopposed until last week when Winston Mathews, an attorney in Charles City County announced for the nomination.

O'Brien's Democratic opponent may well be House colleague Mary Sue Terry of Patrick County, who announced her candidacy March 5.

"One of my priorities as attorney general will be a thorough examination of the option of private management of our state's penal system, or selected institutions within the system," said O'Brien.

"I believe the preponderance of evidence has to make us assume that the unborn are deserving of the same protections we the living seek in safe communities—in a word, life," said O'Brien. "I am pro-life, and anti-abortion. These are beliefs I will uphold, consistent with the law, as Virginia's attorney general."

The Republican state convention is set for May 31 and June 1 in Norfolk.

Commonwealth's Attorney Paul A. Sciortino

Re-election bid

Sciortino announces

By Samuel Martinette, Jr.
VIRGINIA BEACH—Hosting friends and well-wishers at a campaign kickoff event at the Pavilion Tower, Beach Commonwealth's Attorney Paul A. Sciortino has announced his intention to run for re-election in November.

Sciortino, a 55-year old Republican, and former FBI special agent, will seek to continue his hold on an office he won in 1981, defeating his former boss, Andre Evans.

Sciortino, currently serving his first four-year term, defeated Evans in November, 1981. Evans had held the position for the previous 14 years. Sciortino had served under Evans as his chief deputy prosecutor for six years.

In announcing, Sciortino said, "We began a number of changes four years ago and we feel our progress has been good in improving our techniques for prosecution, as well as introducing new human relations activities that help victims and witnesses who are often the casualties of crime."

"We've built a great staff of eager, knowledgeable prosecutors and even though our case load is the heaviest in Virginia, our conviction rate is well above 90 percent," Sciortino added.

Sciortino's office handled 4,536 cases in 1984.

Sciortino campaigns as "The Street Sweeper," a reference to his hard-line attitude toward sentencing and career criminals. The name was reportedly given the prosecutor by a convict serving time against a Sciortino conviction.

No democratic candidate has been announced as yet.

Active in civic affairs as well as legal, Sciortino received both his undergraduate and law degrees at St. John's in Brooklyn, New York. Following a five year general practice in New York state, he joined the Federal Bureau of Investigation from 1961-67. After three years of private practice in Norfolk Sciortino joined the Commonwealth Attorney's office in Virginia Beach, where he served as an assistant until he resigned in 1981 to seek the top job in a heated campaign.

Sciortino serves as a director of the Virginia Beach Crime Solvers program, has served as an adjunct faculty member at Tidewater Community College in Virginia Beach, the Tidewater Police Academy and the Virginia School of Polygraph, is a member of the Virginia Association of Commonwealth's Attorneys and the Tidewater Striders, a popular association for joggers.

Secondary students register for next year's courses

VIRGINIA BEACH—Secondary students in Virginia Beach Public Schools will soon register for courses they want to take next year.

The registration period will be held in all secondary schools from March 11 through April 4, after students in grades 9 through 11 have received a copy of A Student Guide to Secondary Curriculum, which contains a list of all courses offered in the school division. Students who will be in grades 7 and 8 next year will receive a special publication listing the courses they will be able to take. The revised publications will be in the schools around the first of March. By the time students register, they will have had the opportunity to discuss their selections with their parents and school counselors.

Once course requests have been tallied, the school division's data processing department will send a verification of the selections to each student. At that time, the student will still have the opportunity to request a change.

After any course changes are submitted, the tallies will be released to each school so classes can be scheduled and teachers hired to accommodate the demand.

Students will receive their final class schedules in the mail about a week before school begins next fall.

Computer theft may become crime

Sen. Paul S. Trible, Jr., last week introduced legislation making it a federal crime to use a computer to commit a theft, damage or destroy information stored in a computer, or access a computer without authorization.

"Crime has moved into the computer age, and it is time for federal law to respond. Our criminal justice system has failed to keep abreast of rapid technological changes, and the work of businesses and individuals in America is at risk," Trible said.

Last year the American Bar Association reported that 50 percent of business and American government agencies surveyed had been victimized by some form of computer crime over the previous 12 months. Total losses from these crimes was estimated at between $145 million and $730 million.

Last year, Congress took steps to protect the computers of the federal government, particularly with regard to national security and credit-related information. "This was a valuable first step in combating computer crime, and I believe we must build on it by extending similar protections to federally insured banks and businesses that operate in interstate commerce.

"The potential for large-scale theft and fraud against federally insured financial institutions is tremendous, especially given the increased use of electronic fund transfers. Our national and international economic activities must be protected against computer crimes. My bill would help ensure the integrity of the banking system," Trible said.

Trible's bill would also eliminate the many obstacles to prosecution of computer crimes now found in existing statutes. "Because of the lack of a specific federal statute covering banks and interstate commerce, prosecutors must often try computer crime cases under federal wire fraud law. There is an inherent difficulty in attempting to prosecute an action under a statute that was written and intended to apply to a different crime.

"The Department of Justice has already testified that the lack of a specific computer crime statute could lead to the dismissal of a prosecution because decades old statutory elements designed to deal with other crimes have been stretched too far to accommodate modern criminality." My bill would eliminate this problem by providing penalties specifically for the use of a computer in committing one of the covered offenses," Trible said.

Virginia Beach: check point for "Uniroyal One Lap of America"

VIRGINIA BEACH—On Friday, March 8, the second annual "Uniroyal One Lap of America" will roll through Virginia Beach on the way to the finish line in Detroit, Michigan.

The longest, most grueling endurance rally held in North America has about 80 teams that will start in Detroit and hit "four corners"—Seattle, Los Angeles, Jacksonville, Fla., and New York—of the contiguous 48 states before returning to the Motor City. On the eighth day (154 hours into the race), drivers such as: John Buffin - World Rally Champion, Phil Hill - World Champion Driver, Parnelli Jones - Indianapolis 500 Winner, Bruce Jenner - '76 Olympic Gold Medalist and Virginia Beach's own Jim Atwell, general manager of Atlantic BMW, will have to arrive at the check point at Atlantic BMW on Laskin Road.

"One Lap of America" is the successor to Brock Yates' infamous Cannonball Baker Sea-to-Shining Sea Memorial Trophy Dash which became a legend to automotive enthusiasts the world over and was the basis of five motion pictures.

The road rally, scheduled for March 1-8, will air on NBC SportsWorld and will also be covered by USA Today, ESPN, CBS Sports, Car and Driver and others.

Martin Agency moves office

VIRGINIA BEACH—The Martin Agency, a Richmond-based advertising and public relations firm, has moved to larger facilities at Pembroke Corporate Center IV as part of an expansion of its Tidewater operations.

"We just outgrew our ability to handle the increased business here," explained Tom Matthews, vice president and general manager of The Martin Agency/Tidewater.

"We needed an expanded area to accommodate in-house public relations, creative, and production departments," added Matthews. "This allows us to be a full service agency rather than perform as a service office."

The Martin Agency/Tidewater provides advertising and public relations services for the City of Portsmouth Tourism, Rowe Development Company properties in twelve states, Ramada OceanSide Tower, Homeowners Warranty, Inc. of Washington, DC, and Newport News Industrial among others.

The Martin Agency also has offices in Jacksonville, Florida.

SOME OF THE GREATEST THINGS IN AMERICA NEVER CHANGE.

AGRESS July 4, 1776
Declaration of the United States of America.

SOME DO.

U.S. Savings Bonds. Now paying 10.94%.

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay like money market accounts. At the current rate—10.94%—you could double your money in less than seven years. Just hold Bonds for five years and you get the new higher variable rates. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. Savings Bonds are still as safe as ever. They're still exempt from state and local income taxes. And since Bonds cost as little as $25, they're as affordable as ever. What's more, Bonds remain a great way to keep our country strong. You can purchase Bonds almost anywhere. At neighborhood banks, savings and loans and credit unions. Or easier still, right through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

For your free booklet, write: "50 Q&A," U.S. Savings Bonds Division, U.S. SAVINGS BONDS, Washington, DC 20266. Paying Better Than Ever

Variable rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least 5 years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn variable rates when held beyond 10/1/87. Bonds held less than 5 years earn lower rates.

New world narrative

This desire to know what might make a profit for the colony was part of the reason White not only wrote about his travels but also painted the things he saw. These watercolors of everything from fireflies to Indian ceremonies are the most fascinating part of The New World. Our very familiarity with a milkweed pod serves to emphasize how alien it must have seemed to White as he painted this strange plant.

The saddest aspect of the narratives is the cruel and short-sighted way both French and English colonists treated the Native Americans. In several instances, the Europeans spent the summer creating hostility in the only people that could help them survive the winter. For all of their contempt for the heathen, however, the first settlers had no preconceptions about Indians. The people they describe both looked and lived very differently from our modern stereotypes.

Sky Watch

A Monthly Feature Prepared By The Science Museum of Virginia

MARCH SKY CHARTS: To use these charts, face either north or south and hold the charts directly in front of you with the horizon on the bottom. Charts show the brightest stars and planets between the horizon and the part of the sky directly overhead during the early evening hours this month.

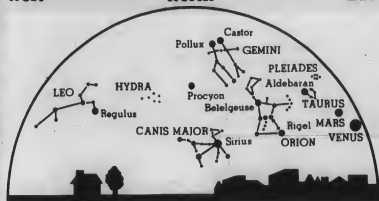

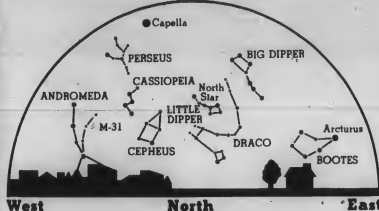

CONSTELLATIONS: Several bright stars are visible in the southern evening sky this month. In the east, the bright star Regulus, which marks the "paw" of Leo the lion, is visible midway between the horizon and zenith. Moving west, look for the brightest star in the sky, Sirius, which is part of the "Big Dog" constellation. Other bright stars to notice in this area of the sky are Procyon, Betelgeuse, Rigel, Aldebaran and the Gemini star pair Castor and Pollux.

Shining high overhead in the north is the bright star Capella. Beneath and to the east of Capella is the Big Dipper star pattern, which is now standing on the tip of its handle. Follow the handle of the Big Dipper to find Arcturus—the bright star in the kite-shaped constellation, Boötes.

PLANETS: Venus continues to be the most brilliant object in the evening sky and is visible in the southwest just after sunset.

Mars, the red planet, is also on view in the southwest and will move into the constellation Aries about mid-month.

Mercury, a planet seldom visible to the naked eye, joins Venus and Mars in the evening sky, appearing low in the west just after sunset by mid-month. On March 23, look for Mercury to pass 5 degrees south of Venus.

Early-morning viewers will have an opportunity to see Jupiter and Saturn in the pre-dawn sky. Look for Jupiter low in the southeast at sunrise, and Saturn low in the southwest. After March 7, watch as Saturn reverses its motion through the heavens, first becoming stationary, then moving backward (westward) through the sky.

CELESTIAL EVENTS: Spring arrives at 11:34 a.m. March 20. At that moment, the sun moves directly above Earth's equator to mark the vernal equinox.

From now until the beginning of summer, the sun will move higher in the sky, bringing warmer temperatures to the northern hemisphere.

The moon also will make some interesting "moves" of its own during the month. In the early morning sky on March 11, look for a waning gibbous moon to pass 3 degrees south of Saturn. Later in the week, on March 16, a waning crescent moon will pass within 5 degrees of Jupiter in the pre-dawn sky.

In the evening sky, a thin crescent moon will pass within 6 degrees of Mercury and Venus on March 22 and within 1.4 degrees of Mars on March 24.

MOON PHASES:
 ① Full moon: Wednesday, March 6
 ② Last quarter: Wednesday, March 13
 ③ New Moon: Thursday, March 21
 ④ First quarter: Friday, March 29.

LAWN AND GARDEN

'Plants at War'

Chemical warfare has been practiced in the plant kingdom for longer than it has been practiced by man. Canada thistle, yellow nutmeg and quackgrass not only do hand-to-hand combat with crops to rob them of water, nutrients and sunlight, they produce toxic chemicals that inhibit plant growth.

Allelopathy is the term which is used to describe the toxic effect of one plant on another. The toxic chemicals can be released by the roots or leaves of living or dead plants or, in some cases, they may be produced by microorganisms that break down organic matter.

The most common occurrence of this characteristic is with the black walnut. Since the time of ancient Rome, gardeners have observed that walnut trees are toxic to many other plants.

Although this toxicity is not fully understood, it is known that a toxic substance called juglone is exuded from the roots of black walnut trees. Not all plants are susceptible to damage. In fact, some seem to have improved vigor when grown near a black walnut.

Studies show that roots of the tree must have contact with, or be very close to, susceptible plants to cause injury. This may include a much larger area, however, than most people expect as the roots of a mature walnut may occupy an area five or six times that of the tree's crown.

Even after a walnut tree is removed, the toxic substance will remain in the soil for about a year. Although leaves, husks and bark contain juglone, mulches of these tree parts are reported not to cause the toxic response that occurs with actual root contact.

Plants which have been recorded as harmed by black walnut include tomatoes, potatoes, blackberries, blueberries, rhododendron, azaleas, and mountain laurel. Plants that do as well, or better, under black walnuts include Kentucky bluegrass, snap beans, sweet corn, red cedars, daffodils and maples.

Noticing that the soil under black walnuts is alkaline (the pH may be 0.7 points higher than the soil beyond the roots), one researcher suggests that this may influence which plants perform well.

Other researchers are looking at allelopathy as a possible way to control weeds. For example, certain selections of rye, wheat and barley significantly reduce weed growth, in part by the release of toxic root substances. Therefore, they offer partial control of certain annual weeds when grown as cover crops in fruit orchards. Although research is in early stages, published reports indicate a potential for use that also some day may be worthwhile for consideration by the home orchardist.

The use of allelopathic plants will not eliminate the need for herbicides, but it is exciting to know that research is being conducted that may provide another alternative to mechanical or synthetic chemical control of weeds.

The Best of Bird Feeders and Bird Foods

"Is there 'one perfect birdfeeder'?"

"What kind of bird food is best?" These are questions I'm often asked, and I am glad to have the extensive research of Dr. Al Geis, Urban Wildlife Biologist for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, to back up and expand upon my own observations and experience in feeding birds.

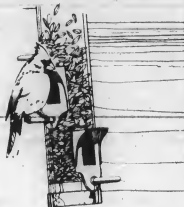

Of course there is no "perfect" feeder or overall best food for all birds, but we can come pretty close to the ideal: Birdfeeder: A tubular, plastic feeder stocked with sunflower seed is highly successful. You'll find fewer squirrels at this feeder than at others, particularly if the feeding "ports" are lined with metal and if you place it a distance from overhanging eaves and branches. You can pick and choose your perch sizes to suit the kinds of birds you have—or want to have—at your feeder. Long perches accommodate large birds. Small birds need short perches—or no perches at all.

Different birds like different foods, of course, but if there is one "general" food favorite, it's sunflower seed. Sunflower seed (stripped or black oil varieties; hulled or in the shell) will attract cardinals, goldfinches, purple finches, grosbeaks and a variety of other colorful, seed-eating birds. Also, birds such as chickadees, titmice, woodpeckers and nuthatches, all of which depend heavily on overwintering insects (adults and larvae) and spiders, will frequent a sunflower seed feeder.

Black oil sunflower seed, with the highest calorie content per gram of kernel, is a fine source of energy, a real necessity for birds when the weather is windy and cold. The seed is probably a good food substitute for the insect-eaters, especially in urban areas where their natural diet may be limited.

Buying seeds: You can buy your sunflower seed pre-packaged or loose. Bagged seed (stripped or black oil varieties) can be found in most supermarkets, hardware stores and agricultural co-ops. It's less expensive to buy 25 to 100-pound bags. An even better buy is loose seed that you bag yourself. That way you get to choose striped or black oil seed. More important, you get to make sure the seed is clean, not infiltrated with stems, insect-riddled seed, and dirt. Clean, black oil sunflower seed is your best buy.

Hulled sunflower seed costs more than unhulled seed, but it's a no-waste food that both saves your plantings from being smothered in hulls and yourself from having to clean hulls off the ground. As for the birds, hulled sunflower seed means less work in getting at the snack that you've put out for them.

McDonald Garden Center

In grandma's day everyone had a root cellar for storing onions, potatoes, carrots, turnips, beets, radishes, and other root crops. The cool temperatures preserved the vegetables and provided use of fresh vegetables all winter long. Utilizing this idea, McDonald Garden Center each year at this time offers bare root plants.

The Root Cellar is open from February through March, offering the gardener a wide range of plant material from the landscape and/or vegetable garden. The gardener benefits from the opportunity to save money by packaging his or her own plants instead of paying for pre-packing.

To insure success with bare root plants, it is important to understand that although dormant and leafless, they are still living plants, each with an enormous potential for growth. Their roots cannot be allowed to dry out or be subjected to high temperatures (remember grandma's cellar!).

Bare root plants should be planted within two to three days of purchase in a properly prepared hole, or else "heeled-in" with peat moss or mulch if the ground is not workable. Free care sheets are available at McDonald's when shopping the Root Cellar. These sheets will give you both care and planting instructions.

A few of the items that will be available at the Root Cellar this year are:

- Forsythia - Also called Golden Bells; yellow flowers; first plant to bloom in spring.
- Blueberries - Southern Rabbit's Eye; need two varieties for cross pollination. For Tidewater and other Southern areas.
- White Dogwood - State flower; when mature, produces white flowers in spring; red berries and leaves are displayed in the fall.
- Pussy Willow - A traditional favorite with their attractive catkin-like blooms.

Others include asparagus roots, onion sets, potato sets, and much more. For the rose lovers, a complete selection of quality, pre-packaged Jackson and Perkins roses are available along with Stark Brothers fruit trees.

So, during the next few weeks, check out the Root Cellar at McDonald Garden Center, and get a head start on your spring planting. Now's the time!

G&S assumes Case/I.H. contract

G&S Equipment Co., Inc., of 1229 South Military Highway in Chesapeake, has taken on the J. I. Case/International Harvester agricultural dealer contract. This is a result of the much-publicized Case-Harvester merger which combined the two traditional companies into a larger, more competitive concern.

Viewed as a good sign by most in the troubled agricultural industry, the merger caused some conflict in areas with both Case and Harvester dealerships.

"Fortunately, this area blended in very well," said Walter Young, manager of G&S. "In all of Virginia and North Carolina, only one dealer decided to close and there were extenuating circumstances in that case."

"We feel very optimistic about the future here in the Tidewater area. There are many excellent farms and active commercial companies."

"We foresee a growing market for quite some time," Young added.

G&S Equipment celebrated its thirtieth year as an International Harvester dealership in 1984.

Know your garden's soil

Over six billion tons of soil are windwashed or rainwashed off U.S. farmland, forests, construction sites, rangeland and streambanks, reports "National Wildlife" magazine. That's enough soil to fill a line of dump trucks stretching to the moon and three-quarters of the way back.

One key to successful gardening is knowing the makeup of your soil. For starters, try the texture test. Take a small amount of your soil, wet it and rub it between your fingers. A gritty feeling indicates your soil is rather sandy. A sticky feeling means your soil has a high clay content, while silt-laden soil feels smooth like flour. To make your garden grow best, your soil should have an equal makeup of these three sizes of particles.

Pavilion designers recognized with Honor Award

VIRGINIA BEACH—The Virginia Society of American Institute of Architects has chosen Walsh Ashe Associates, Inc. to receive the 1984 Honor Award for their design of the Virginia Beach pavilion Arts and Conference Center.

The Virginia Beach City Council presented the bronze plaque

Session has adjourned

during the February 25 Council Meeting.

The judges described the architecture of the Pavilion as "...creative, attractive and clearly emanates a sense of its importance...This project reflects simplicity, is extremely straightforward and appropriate to the task."

Judges consisted of principals from architectural firms in New York City and the Dean of the School of Architecture at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

The Pavilion's $16 million structure, completed in September 1980, showcased 604 events, attended by 436,000 people in 1984. Pavilion activities range from Mid-Atlantic Sports and Boat Shows in the exhibition hall, to community productions in the theater.

The Virginia Beach Pavilion has received widespread praise from convention delegates, exhibitors and community arts groups.

City contemplates aid to indigent parents

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

VIRGINIA BEACH—City Council next Monday will consider interim and long-term solutions to providing obstetrical care for indigent Virginia Beach citizens.

Remedies are needed, according to Hector Rivera, assistant city manager for human services, because the attending staff at Virginia Beach General Hospital feel over-burdened to the point that they are talking about giving up practice at Virginia Beach General Hospital rather than continue.

The problem developed when Norfolk General Hospital in 1981 stopped accepting patients for deliveries from Virginia Beach. Resident physicians at the Norfolk Hospital, funded in part by the State, had provided the care.

Norfolk General now accepts only high-risk maternity patients, making up no more than five percent of the deliveries. At present, about 10 percent of the Virginia Beach maternity patients deliver at DePaul Hospital on a quota system and the remainder are delivered at Virginia Beach General Hospital. The number of deliveries has increased each year since Norfolk discontinued its service to 439 last year, or approximately 2.14 deliveries per doctor, per month.

Rivera recommended as an interim solution that the city provide doctors a fee of up to $500 for each indigent delivery, reduced by Medicaid reimbursement and patient contribution according to State guidelines.

The fee could be based on anticipated state support and im-

Skitch Henderson leads Symphony Pops at Pavilion

VIRGINIA BEACH—Skitch Henderson, who has been linked to popular music as conductor to Judy Garland, Mickey Rooney, Frank Sinatra and Bing Crosby, will conduct The Virginia Symphony Pops in a pair of concerts in Hampton Roads, March 16 and 17.

Henderson will lead The Virginia Symphony Pops in a concert of popular and classical selections at Hampton University's Ogden Hall on Saturday, March 16 at 8 p.m. and at the Pavilion in Virginia Beach on Sunday, March 17 at 2:30 p.m. Highlighting the concert will be an arrangement by Henderson of Jerome Kern selections in tribute to the 100th anniversary of Kern's birth.

Having conducted nearly every major American orchestra, Henderson has directed leading orchestras in Canada, England, Germany and Australia. Among his credits include his ballet, "Curaco" which he composed for the Boston Ballet, numerous film scores for television, music director for NBC and the Tonight Show and premieres of Menotti's early works. His most recent venture has been the creation of the "New York Pops."

Tickets for the March 16 concert are available at $12, $10, and $6, with discounts for senior citizens, full-time students and children under 12.

Legislators satisfied with '85 session

By Ronnie Greene

General Assembly Reporter

RICHMOND—As far as city delegates and senators are concerned, the recent session of the General Assembly was one of the best ever for Virginia Beach. While that group of politicians is basking in its legislative glory, though, another political group—City Council—is not as happy with the results.

Proposals providing more money for highway renovation and for city schools were passed into law. Meanwhile, a proposal by Del. John G. Dicks, D-Chesterfield, to give "relief" for Sandbridge homeowners may do more harm than good, Council warns.

While most bills sponsored by city delegates and senators were passed, a portion were either defeated or withdrawn.

Highway Funding Bill

The most important piece of legislation concerning the city, said Del. Glenn B. McClanan, D-Virginia Beach, is the highway funding bill. The bill will allow for "road maintenance an additional $3.3 million for fiscal 1986 alone," he said.

The formula was changed this year to permit "the population factor" to be the top consideration. In other words, larger cities, population-wise, will receive a greater share of state highway funding than lower-populated cities. In the past, land space was the top consideration.

McClanan says emphasis will be put into the "most congested" roads in the city, including Lynnhaven, Holland, Princess Anne, Indian River and Kempville.

Sen. Clarence A. Holland, D-

Virginia Beach, agrees the road formula bill is "without question, the most important to the city." Beyond that, he said legislation with the greatest impact on Virginia Beach concerns additional education funding.

The education bills will provide for an increase in per pupil spending by the state to just over $1,900 and a teacher pay hike of eight percent. The bills impact all of Virginia.

The Sandbridge bill

Dick's proposal is intended to give relief to property owners, in a two block area of Sandbridge, whose homes are moving toward the Atlantic Ocean because of erosion. It will permit eight homeowners to build bulkheads on their property as a defense against erosion. Bulkheads are physical barriers intended to hold

Virginia Court of Appeals

Barrow assumes new judicial role

Part one of two on the man and his job

By Jeanne Grant Champman
Special To The Sun

In the nine short years Beach resident Bernard Barrow has made the transition from lawyer to delegate in the General Assembly; and from Virginia Beach Circuit Court judge to justice on the Virginia Court of Appeals.

Barrow's meteoric rise seems to sharply contrast the newly-created court, in that while likely to have a busy future, the court is slow in starting.

The trial court judge's workload is demanding and the schedule full, so full in fact that Barrow describes it as "almost inflexible" at times.

Like a racer anxiously awaiting the gun to sound, Barrow stands poised, ready to spring into his new judicial duties. The years of hard work have prepared him.

"The workload is at this point very low," the trim jurist said. "We've got cases pending. (The workload) is going to be very heavy, we think, but they (the cases) aren't matured yet. They are coming on line very slowly," he added. "All briefs have to be written, the record prepared, and so forth."

Barrow eagerly looks forward to the time when "We'll start either on Monday or Tuesday and hear an argument almost all day for the remainder of the week. Right now, you can come and see 15 minutes worth of argument."

"It is quite a contrast between that and my activity on the Circuit Court," Barrow said. "On the Circuit Court I came in everyday and from either 9 or 9:30, to early afternoon or evening, I was hearing cases. I knew where I was going to be every day, Monday through

Now faced with the task of setting up a new office, Barrow adds "I appreciate the added flexibility I have now. But I must admit I'm anxious for our workload to build up."

"Now, I have trouble because I'm just looking for things to do," he smiled. "While there is plenty to do, it's a little 'make work' at times."

Barrow's education was the first step in preparation for his judgeship. He views his undergraduate and graduate schooling at the University of Virginia as "a very significant part" of his life.

Barrow's first five years of private practice were with an admiralty law firm where he was active in trial work.

"I look back at that time over and over again as splendid

Politics

The plot begins to ticken as the political characters continue to line up² their alliances in preparation for what appears to be destined to be an enormous job shift this fall.

Mr. Baliles, the attorney general of Virginia is running against Mr. Davis, the current lieutenant governor, for the democratic nomination for the top job, which is being vacated by Mr. Robb, according to law. (Mr. Robb will be looking for suitable employment, one hears.) Vacancies exist in those two support jobs and there shall be no lack of candidates to contest for those spots. In the meantime, several republicans have mentioned they would like to be Virginia's boss, including Mr. Vigurie, the direct mail whiz who finally opted to pursue the number two job, Mr. Parris, of the U.S. Congress and Mr. Durette, who already has campaigned statewide in the past. If Mr. Parris were selected to carry the G.O.P. banner, presumably his congressional seat would be up for grabs. Confused?

Let us move on to Lt. governor. If the democratic Mr. Wilder of Richmond leaves the state senate to campaign, there would be a spot there for some ambitious Virginian. Republican constants include Mr. Giesen of the House of Delegates, also leaving his job, one would assume, to campaign.

Virginia Beach's own Mr. O'Brien (W. R.) seeks the attorney general nomination from the party of Lincoln, as does Mr. Mathews, an attorney from Charles City County. Mr. O'Brien would vacate a House seat to run against Ms. Terry, the probable Democratic nominee, who would also vacate a house seat.

So begins the merry-go-round, with a second round of announcements now arriving for the seats being vacated by those above. All in all, it looks like a bumper crop year for political pollsters, specialty advertising salesmen and editorial writers.—S.M.

Death of a magazine

The recent demise of Commonwealth, after five decades of publication, should sadden all. After coming south from Richmond, the publication ended up a child of the Swann oil empire. Although circulation seemed sufficient and advertising revenue appeared to be forthcoming, one never knows what goes on behind closed doors of the sort that Mr. Swann erected on College Place in Norfolk.

So it was that one day last week Mr. Swann's magazine employees were told that they no longer had jobs, and not to report the following morning.

Perhaps it was a residual effect connected to Mr. Swann's other holdings, such as the aborted refinery project he had slated for Chesapeake, that caused Commonwealth to fold. We are saddened for the editors, writers, artists and salespeople who find themselves without work this week. And we are saddened for our state, which lost several magazines in order to make Mr. Swann's Commonwealth, for one of the many regional magazines gobbled up for its circulation list was Metro, The Magazine of Hampton Roads.

Even if one wasn't a great Commonwealth fan, it is always sad to see an area lose one more independent voice. Media in our town is mostly owned by one man, or by out of town conglomerates. That control means you, as readers or listeners, hear or read what the man wants you to hear, and as purchasers, ultimately through advertising costs, pay what the man wants, as the agencies all pay the price demanded.

Sometimes it just seems like a one voice town.—S.M.

Paper updates circulation

Beginning this month the Virginia Beach Sun has begun using a new, expanded circulation computer to prepare subscription labels and renewal notices.

The new system is designed to immediately enter new subscribers, address changes and other information updates. In the past, a new subscriber would have a two or three week delay before mail service began. Similar delays were necessary for address changes.

Like all new systems, especially with computers, there may be bugs in the program during the initial stages.

We ask your indulgence and assistance as we get our computer system in order. If there is any interruption or delay in your subscription or error in your name and address on the mailing label, please call 547-4571.

Letters To The Editor

Praise for the General Assembly

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

The Virginia National Organization for Women congratulates the 1985 Virginia General Assembly for defeating the anti-abortion legislation proposed by Del. Ted Morrison (D-Newport News), billed as parental consent. H.B. 1364 was a blatant assault on the privacy and rights of the most vulnerable of Virginians women; those under eighteen, pregnant, and without a direct vote in elections.

We commend the courage of those legislators willing to stand up for women, and willing to stand up to their peers and deny passage of this bill. They refused to bow to attempts at bullying them into bullying young women. It is gratifying to know our legislators could recognize the characteristics displayed attempting to pass this bill as characteristic of the bill itself. Controlling others whether appropriate or not, enforceable or not, has never been a goal of a truly free society.

We praise the legislative process that, in this instance, assured that independently living, breathing, human beings are left free to control their own destinies, free from the threat of a return to back alley abortions, unsound medical practices, self induced abortions, death during childbirth or the suicides experienced in the past history of this nation as a result of an unwanted pregnancy.

In praise of gun ownership

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

Several weeks ago Dear Abby ran some 1980 statistics designed to show why we need gun control, presumably because the availability of guns inevitably results in more murders and other violent crime.

Well, how does Abby explain the steady decline of the 1980 homicide rate of 10.2 per 100,000 to 9.1 in 1982 while approximately 2.5 million new handguns each year were going into private hands?

Why didn't Abby include the Mexican homicide rate which is 3 1/2 times greater than that of the U.S.? Maybe it doesn't count that the Mexican murder rate with knives is three times greater than the U.S. handgun homicide rate. Maybe Dear Abby left Mexico out of the account because the country is like a huge Morton Grove—it's illegal for private citizens to have handguns.

For Abby to support gun control she has to assume that gun control reduces guns in circulation which, in turn, reduces crime. The facts clearly don't support Dear Abby's wishes.

One thing we know works. Keeping violent criminals off the street and executing murderers keeps them from preying upon new victims.

Saint Cleopatra's Day

That's what she called it when she brought the card down to the beach to show Julie and me. She was the nearest thing to a wife I had seen since "Orphans of the Storm" with the Gish sisters, and she had adopted the wife and me while we lay stretched out under a summer sun.

Now summer may seem an odd time to you or me to discuss Saint Pat's Day, the yearly orgy of being Irish which sweeps America, but the little girl brought it up, not I.

One would have to live a very insular life not to be aware of what Saint Patrick's Day means to Irish-Americans, who seem to miraculously multiply tenfold on the day of "the wearing of the green." As any fool knows, you must wear green on that day to show others you aren't any leprechaun who needs pinching, nor prodding.

But drinking green beer? How such a thing could have started one can only surmise. Could some greedy tavernkeeper have served elderly suds to a group of sons of the old sod who were already past the point of a taste test? Why green beer? Italians don't drink their wine with pasta in it on Columbus Day, nor do the English drop kidneys into their tea on the Queen's birthday.

Ed's notes

By Samuel Martinette, Jr.

And of course the truth is most Irish in Ireland don't drink green beer on Saint Paddy's Day. According to Irish friends of mine, including one who was a reporter for the Limerick newspaper, if the Irish drink anything at all that day, they do it at home or in the familiar confines of the neighborhood pub, as after all, it is a religious holiday for many of them.

But here in America everyone is Irish that day, as evidenced by the parades held coast to coast, the green top hats bartenders wear in many of the bars, the wearing of the shamrock and the massacre of the Irish accent (Saints preserve us!).

But let us not lose ourselves in polemics and return to the point of our story, which is the little girl with the Saint Cleopatra's Day card.

She was a tiny blonde child, about five, who dug shyly in the sand with her toe while we looked over the card she had fetched from her house just up the beach.

"It's from my Daddy," the child told us. "He's a Marine," she added with a stern voice. "And he loves me and my mommy. That's why he sent me that Saint Cleopatra's Day card."

I remember thinking it odd at the time that the child should confuse two historical figures so linked with snakes, Saint Patrick being credited with running most of the snakes out of Ireland when he was a missionary to the savages, and Cleopatra, the Greek queen of Egypt who met her end at the fangs of an unfriendly Asp. Could it have been that the snakes left Ireland and headed for Egypt?

"Do you have a Saint Cleopatra's Day card?" the little girl asked my wife.

"A shleight look, 'but I'm sure I'll get one next year.'"

Ah, I thought to myself, so the kid's a shill for the Hallmark people, a tiny route salesman working the beach.

But I must admit she has made Saint Cleopatra's Day a lot more special for Julie and me.

VBGH

Auxiliary provides hospital with support and care

By Samuel Martinette, Jr.

Editor
VIRGINIA BEACH—Of the many memories visitors to this seaside resort might carry home one of the most poignant for those who have the misfortune of being hospitalized could well be a visit from a stranger to their bedside. That stranger might bear flowers, snacks, a local newspaper and a smile.

"We have a unique service for out-of-towners," explained Sonja Purkey, president of the 1,000 member Auxiliary to Virginia Beach General Hospital, during a recent interview.

"Our visitor's Service provides a shell of fresh flowers to all out-of-town patients in our hospital. Tourists are so thrilled to have a surprise visit," Purkey laughed. "It's just a special extra we provide."

Back in the 1960's, when the auxiliary was founded under the leadership of Betsy Sebrrell, the General Hospital of Virginia Beach was located on 25th and Arctic Avenue, in the Beach Borough. Following the hospital to its new quarters on First Colonial Road in 1965, the auxiliary has matched growth with the City.

"Our membership consists of people who have been long-time supporters of VBGH," added Jackie Wolcott, chairman of the annual Auction/Buffer, recently held at the Cavalier Hotel. "Many of the hospitals volunteers become members, as well as many wives of members of the medical staff."

"The auxiliary is drawn from many of the same people who support other civic groups," said Purkey. "Including doctors, lawyers and Indian chiefs..."

The auxiliary operates the hospital gift shop, as well as raising funds for hospital improvements and equipment purchases that aren't provided for in the regular budget.

"They have done a superb job," said Dr. Robert Morris, a vascular surgeon who practices at Beach General. "They not only raise money to purchase medical equipment, and to improve the environment for patients, they support the medical staff as well. I don't think the hospital would function as well without them."

Each summertime the call goes out to members and the community at large to comb their attics and closets for items to be auctioned off to benefit the Hospital. The auctions began in 1979, and brought in $19,000 that first year, for the hospital.

"We were thrilled," Wolcott said.

For the past three years the proceeds of the annual affair have been directed to the radiation/oncology department.

This year's take was $61,000. According to Purkey, $190,000 has been raised to date.

Raffle tickets for a car are sold, and approximately 500 attend the gala evening at the Cavalier-on-the-Hill. Durwood Zedd calls the auction, which is preceded by a "silent auction," during which smaller items are bid on by strolling patrons. Items might run from a pair of trousers to a work of art.

Car Raffle Winner

Among other projects the auxiliary has undertaken have been the purchase of Apea machinery used in the prevention of sudden death syndrome, and the provision of the required automobile seats for children under 20 pounds, at a reduced rental rate.

Membership in the Auxiliary to Virginia Beach General Hospital is open to all under a sliding scale, according to Jackie Wolcott, running $5 per year to $100 for a lifetime membership.

"Many of our newer residents don't know about the law," Purkey explained.

As well as the social functions the auxiliary sponsors there are two annual general meetings, open to all members.

"This is when we would like to have interested persons come out to learn about the auxiliary," said Sonja Purkey. "We have a tea and a program for both us and the general public."

Current auxiliary officers are Sonja Purkey, president; Jean Blanchard, vice president; Judy Jared, recording secretary; Helen Jane Friedman, corresponding secretary; Jean McCoy, treasurer; Kilty Trant, parliamentarian and Joyce Gray, past president.

"We love them all," said Dr. Morris. "They make it a nicer place to be when (patients) don't want to be there."

Jaycees taking nominations for Beach First Citizen

VIRGINIA BEACH—Paul Anninos, chairman of the 1985 First Citizen Award Committee for the Virginia Beach Jaycees, has announced that the Jaycees are now accepting nominations for the Thirty-fifth (35th) Annual First Citizen of Virginia Beach Award.

The First Citizen's Award is perhaps the most prestigious award given to a Virginia Beach citizen. It is presented to the individual who has made outstanding contributions in their profession and who has unselfishly devoted their time and energies in service to their community.

Following selection, the recipient is honored at a banquet attended by past recipients, state and local dignitaries, invited guests, and interested citizens. This year's banquet will be held in early May, 1985.

This summer

The Mounties are coming!

By Lee Cahill

VIRGINIA BEACH—Mounted police are coming to Virginia Beach this summer.

City Council Monday afternoon by a vote of 10-0 agreed to try out a mounted patrol with the start of the resort season.

The $20,000 up-front cost to get the program started is available within the existing police budget, but City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said that he would incorporate the continuation of the program in next year's budget.

The program, under the Special Operations Bureau, will include six officers, eight horses and one supervisor.

The State has made available an unused building at Camp Pendleton which will be converted into stables with eight stalls.

Lt. Frank Drew of the Bureau, said that existing personnel will be used and that over 100 officers have applied for the six slots.

Norfolk plans to have a 12-unit patrol on the streets in July.

Maintenance costs, including veterinarian and feed bills, per horse will be $1,000 a year, Drew said.

The horses will be used on the beach, at shopping centers, as tactical units, for special events, sporting events and for keeping order.

The high visibility of the horses is considered a deterrent to crime. Also, the horses are expected to be used for public relations, with stables open to the public.

Councilwoman Meyer Oberndorf was assured that any leavings in the wake of the horses will be cleaned up immediately with special equipment carried by the officers.

Drew also assured her that horses can stand heat up to 110 degrees and work eight hours a day without ill effect.

Councilman John A. Baum agreed that this would be light duty compared to ploughing.

Drew also said that the city expects to have all the horses donated.

The program was endorsed by the Resort Area Advisory Commission which had recommended that the police presence be upgraded on the street in the resort center during the summer season to enforce such ordinances as drinking in public, abusive language and other behavior violations.

Chief Charles Wall, proposed the program to gain increased visibility which enhances crime prevention and public relations and the feeling of public safety.

presented as early as April 1. The interim solution also calls for the contract for delivery care for all medically-indigent on an annual basis utilizing 50 percent state funds.

As a long-term solution, Rivera recommended that the city develop a block of state funds which could be matched by city funds to contract for medically-indigent care.

Pre-natal and post-natal care are provided by the Virginia Beach Department of Health.

The city at present contributes $1,603,344 to public health. Included in this figure are: Forty-five percent of the Public Health Department budget of $2,598,210 or $1,034,194.

Eastern Virginia Medical Authority - $260,000 or $1,260,000 since 1981.

Midlife program allocation - $150,000.

State-local hospitalization - $159,150 or 25 percent of $636,600. Virginia Beach General received $219,921 for 136 patients of which 49 were obstetrics cases ($40,553).

Also, EVMA provides Virginia Beach General with $88,000 in state money for medical education and indigent care; another $100,000 for indigent obstetrical care will be available in July under Virginia Beach Del. Owen B. Pickett's bill passed by the General Assembly; $200,000 to $300,000 will be available for maternal child health expansion by July if a block grant expansion is approved.

Rivera reports that the burden Virginia Beach General Hospital and on the attending physician staff is substantial and growing. Some relief for the hospital, covering about 20 percent of the patients, is available through state-local hospitalization and through Medicaid. Less relief is provided the attending physicians, however, as only Medicaid covers their service with a partial payment.

In addition Rivera said, patients who should be scheduled for delivery to reduce the likelihood of death to mother and child must wait until labor begins, to enter the hospital. Virginia Beach had perinatal death rates for both white and non-white patients which were slightly higher than the state average.

Now that the IRA media blitz has cooled

By Doris N. Mozley
Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc.
Hampton Roads

Now that some of the initial IRA advertising blitz has died down, much confusion remains about Individual Retirement Accounts and IRA investments available. How do you go about making your IRA decision? How do you select a suitable investment which fits your current financial objectives yet at the same time affords you flexibility should your objectives change? While there are no simple answers to these important questions, there is a type of Individual Retirement Account which will provide you with maximum investment flexibility—the self-directed IRA.

A self-directed Individual Retirement Account is an IRA account where you choose and control how your own IRA funds will be invested. Self-directed IRAs are most often available from major stock brokerage firms. Usually other financial institutions offering IRAs such as banks and insurance companies limit your investment choice to a single type of product—certificates of deposit or tax-deferred annuities. A self-directed IRA allows you to tailor your investment program not only to your specific needs and objectives but also to changing economic situations. For example, due to historically high short-term interest rates over the last few years, many individuals have invested IRA assets in money market funds. As short-term rates decline and you want to lock in a higher long-term rate found in a government or corporate bond issue, or if you want to purchase a particularly attractive stock, the IRA's money fund shares are sold to cover purchase of your new investment within a self-directed IRA.

Many investors may find that by establishing a self-directed IRA, they will be able to maximize investment diversification because of the wide variety of investments offered by these "financial supermarkets." Self-directed IRAs usually allow for investments in stocks, bonds, money funds, annuities, CDs, limited partnerships, covered option writing, mutual funds and zero coupon bonds to name a few. As you can see, a self-directed IRA allows you to diversify your IRA investments instead of limiting yourself to one type of investment over the years.

Unlike the Individual Retirement Accounts and investments offered by banks and insurance companies, a self-directed IRA can reflect the degree of risk you are willing to take. You will find that a self-directed IRA account would be as suitable for the conservative investor as it would be for the middle-of-the-road investor or the risk taker. Assumption of risk within your IRA account takes into consideration such factors as your age—how many years you have to accumulate retirement funds—and other anticipated sources of retirement income such as Social Security, and employer-sponsored retirement plans.

U.S. Savings Bonds. Now paying 10.94%.

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay like money market accounts! At the current rate—10.94%—you could double your money in less than seven years. Just hold Bonds for five years and you get the new higher variable rate. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. Savings Bonds are still as safe as ever. They're still exempt from state and local income taxes. And since Bonds cost as little as $25, they're as affordable as ever. What's more, Bonds remain a great way to keep our country strong.

You can purchase Bonds almost anywhere. At neighborhood banks, savings and loans and credit unions. Or easier still, right through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

For your free booklet, write: "50 Q&A," U.S. Savings Bonds Division, U.S. SAVINGS BONDS, Washington, DC 20226.

Variable rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 10/1/82 and held to least 5 years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn variable rates when held beyond 12/31/87. Bonds held less than 5 years earn lower interest.

This panoramic view affords those present a most life-like quality. People don't just look at planetarium movies; they experience them. Virginia Beach has a planetarium located in Plaza Junior High School. It is in use each day of the week for schools within the Hampton Roads area. The planetarium staff coordinates the programs according to the needs of the teacher in order to assist in their teachings.

Since the theatre is considered a part of the Virginia Beach public school system, it is paid for in part with city tax monies.

On Sunday and Tuesday evening from 7 to 8 p.m., the planetarium is open to the public and is free of charge. Sky-watchers of Ancient Mexico is the program for March. It deals with

Some of the secrets of Monte Alban, Chichen Itza, Plaquen, Tenochtitlan and other cities are revealed in this presentation. Remaining days in March to view this educational show are March 17, 19, 24, 26 and 31.

Except in July when the Planetarium is closed, a different program is planned each month. Shadow of the Egyptian Pyramids is the program planned for April.

preparation for everything I've done since, in terms of my professional life," he said, "because most of my professional activity has been associated with the courts - the trial lawyer, the trial judge, and now the appellate court judge."

Barrow's work in criminal practice as a defense attorney has been beneficial.

"It involved a great deal of litigation court work. It gave me some insight into a side of the world that people don't often have the opportunity to see with as broad a picture as you do as a defense attorney."

Barrow's private practice involved partnerships with other lawyers. He said this trained him for judicial independence. In the General Assembly, Barrow served on the Finance, the Chesapeake and its Tributaries Committees, and the Mental Health Commission. Looking back at this period of time he recalls "I found it very interesting."

Referring to his Circuit Court position, Barrow observed, "If I had to pick, I'd probably say overall the most rewarding period in my professional life was my tenure in the Circuit Court."

"What I enjoyed most, or felt I did best is hard to say," the calm jurist added. "I've enjoyed every single position for different reasons."

"I constantly struggle with the dilemmas of which way to go at those crossroads of life," he pondered. "I've never been disappointed in any of the routes I've taken."

"I've never had an ultimate goal I'm working towards though. I've heard people say 'I've always wanted to be a judge.' Even when I was a lawyer, the thought crossed my mind but not seriously. I never thought much about it."

"I guess the one consistent theme in my adult life is interest in public service," he said. "I've enjoyed that and have never had a great deal of desire to pursue any other course."

"I've had an orientation towards people-oriented work, although the role of a judge is not one where you are specifically helping people. In a very broad sense you are, but in a specific sense, it is not your role."

"You are there to resolve disputes in a helping role," he advised. "But, there are a lot of people I'm sure who come before my court who would say I'm not a helping person."

"My basic concern, though, is for people and their welfare. I think without that you would be a cold sort of creature."

"You need some concern for people as a judge, but there is a proper perspective."

Richard Brydges, a lawyer who has appeared before Barrow many times, describes Barrow's concern as an affinity and rapport for his fellow man. He cares, Brydges said, for the "little people."

Brydges added "Barrow is the champion of the people's cause who can't champion their own."

Barrow said he enjoys life. He jogs three to four miles four to five days a week. He likes the quiet life, spending time with his family and old friends.

"I am not," he said in his own words, "a social-eater."

Barrow is reserved, projecting a sound judicial manner. But he is also accommodating and pleasant.

"Barrow has an open door policy," said Brydges, adding that the judge combines his judicial manner with his friendliness. If you have a question or a problem, Brydges said, Barrow will listen.

When asked to describe himself, Barrow responded, "Who am I? I don't know. Maybe the quest for identity is something we keep after for most of our lives. We try to identify exactly who we are."

"I'm a father, a husband, a judge. I was a lawyer. The sort of things tell me who I am too."

"I've always been resistant to measuring people by what they say. I think people should be measured more by what they do."

Bernard Barrow has advanced rapidly through the judicial system. Some feel he is headed towards the Virginia Supreme Court.

Next Week: How Barrow views his judgeship and the new court.

Beach legislators end busy session off erosion.

The legislation was taken to the Assembly because the Wetlands Board had refused to grant such relief, citing possible problems with the use of bulkheads.

According to Councilwoman Barbara Henley, the bill "doesn't address the erosion problem. It basically only gives band-aid relief."

Henley and fellow council members are upset that only a limited number of homeowners were granted such relief. Dicks said he was sponsoring the bill because, "Some of my constituents have vacation homes in Sandbridge." Henley said the eight homes are not the ones in the greatest need of relief on the beach.

More important, she said, is the fact that bulkheads may "create even more problems than they remedy." She is concerned that they will cause damage to adjoining property, which could cause "financial liability" to the city.

Holland explained that he "understands" Council's position, but added, "if the bulkheads are built correctly, they shouldn't have problems." He indicated that a legislative study committee has been appointed to investigate the situation.

Farming bills

Among other bills that will impact the city is McClanahan's legislation permitting better research of crops and flowers. This will be made possible by combining the research efforts of the Bayside area Virginia Truck and Ornamentals Station which stations on the Eastern Shore and at Virginia Tech.

Transportation bills

A bill proposed by Del. Owen B. Pickett, D-Virginia Beach, will allow for study of alternative means of transportation for Southside Hampton Roads. One alternative concerns having express lanes, with at least five passengers per car, during peak hours. The bill was proposed to help defray backed-up military traffic along Interstate 64.

A bill was also passed to "ban modified vehicles" from city streets, according to Del. Robert Tata, R-Virginia Beach. The legislation concerns vehicles which have been "jacked up" by their owners. According to Tata, such vehicles have caused safety problems. Also, he said, a number of insurance companies will not insure them.

While the majority of city-sponsored legislation was passed, there were a few bills which were either defeated in session or were withdrawn by their sponsors.

Tata's legislation that would allow school age children, between 5 and 13, to stay on school property before and after school was defeated in a Senate Standing Committee. Tata proposed the bill to allow single parents or two-working parents to leave their children at school until they could pick them up. The parents would have to pay for the service.

According to the delegate, private city day care centers "hired a high powered lobbyist" to represent them before the Senate. The vote in the committee was 8-7. Tata said the Virginia Education Association, Parent and Teacher Association and the Recreation Department all favored his proposal.

For the third consecutive year, a proposal by Del. J. W. "Billy" O'Brien, D-Virginia Beach, to have a state lottery was not passed.

Also, Del. W. R. "Buster" O'Brien, R-Virginia Beach, let his proposal to outlaw "happy hours" die quietly. He did so because the Alcohol Beverage Control Commission is currently studying the effects of happy hours.

In the end, though, McClanahan, participating in his fourteenth session, said, "this was as good as any session since I've been here. It was very positive."

While Councilwoman Henley said there was a "difficulty in communication between the city and the delegates," she added that "there were some very good results."

Selecting the right trees for your home

By Diane Relf
Virginia Tech Extension
Home Horticulturist

People sometimes are hesitant to invest in trees, rationalizing that it may be several years before they have any aesthetic or environmental impact on their homes. It is because of this time lag, however, that trees should be one of the first elements added to the landscape.

As the tree matures, you regain your investment, not only in pleasure, but in enhanced value to your home and in savings on your heating and cooling bills.

Since trees affect wind speed and direction, they can be used to modify temperature. In the winter, trees on the northwest side of your house can reduce the effects of harsh winter winds. Deciduous trees planted on the south side of the house will block out the hot summer sun, keeping the house cooler. In the winter, they will lose their leaves, letting the winter sun add warmth to the home.

Once the purposes and location for trees have been established, select those that will best fit your needs. To do this, consider the following factors.

- Hardiness - The ability survive extremes of winter and summer temperatures. Many people like to select native species to enhance hardiness factors.
- Mature height and spread - A particularly important aspect of the tree is to provide shade. This is combined with consideration of available space to make sure it is not planted so close to the house or other trees as to require removal of branches as it develops.
- Growth rate - Particularly important in determining how soon a tree will have desired characteristics.

- Type of root system - Deeper rooting trees can better tolerate drought. Shallow rooted trees give more problems in sewage lines and drainage fields.
- Maintenance requirements - This includes moisture and fertility requirements, cleanliness, desirable fruits, nuts or seed pods. Avoid weak wood that breaks easily, creating pruning problems.
- Ornamental effect - This includes branching habits, texture and color of bark, flowers, fruit and foliage.
- Insect and disease susceptibility - A particularly important aspect as the gypsy moth becomes more prevalent in Virginia.

There are many excellent trees for use in Virginia. A few that deserve more frequent use include the following.

Allegheny serviceberry - A small deciduous tree that grows up to 30 feet with gray winter bark, delicate white flowers in early spring and red fruit in July. It has yellow and red fall foliage.

Littleleaf linden - Several new and improved selections of linden are becoming increasingly available in the trade. "Greenspire" has an oval shape with small, dense, dark leaves and an estimated mature height of 40 feet. All perform well under difficult city conditions.

River birch - It is a large tree, often approaching 90 feet in height, and is typically found along stream beds or lowlands where roots can easily penetrate to water. It is noted for its excellent cinnamon-colored, exfoliating bark and for being resistant to borers.

Help for farmers

A $30,165 grant has been awarded to the Virginia Cooperative Extension Service for the purpose of assisting farmers with financial problems.

"Farmers in financial distress will be identified and provided the highest level of financial assistance and guidance," said Jerry Warmann, Virginia Tech Extension agricultural economist and project coordinator. "This should enable them to adjust their farm business to ensure the survival of the farm firm."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture grant will be used to establish six financial counseling centers throughout the state. Staffed by Extension farm management agents and volunteer financial analysts, the centers will assist those farmers referred by local Extension agents and agricultural lenders.

"This comprehensive project will address a real need in Virginia agriculture," said Warmann.

Beat cold damage

By Jack Campbell
McDonald Garden Center

Most cold injury results when water freezes rapidly in plant cells. Ice crystals form, then puncture the cell membranes. This causes the cell to die. When enough cells die the plants take on a yellowish or brownish cast. Severely damaged leaves will turn black if the freezing occurs very quickly.

Last year's sudden temperature drop on Christmas Eve was very rough on many of our plants. Most of the injury we encountered resulted because the shrubs were not acclimated to cold temperatures. Normally plants that grow in Tidewater can take the temperatures that we experienced then, but they need to be acclimated or "hardened-off" beforehand. Maximum plant hardiness is usually attained in January and obviously last December many plants just weren't ready for the cold. The warm weather leading up to the big freeze really set the plants up for some very nasty cold damage.

We continually urge our customers to water broadleaf evergreens throughout the winter. The reason for this is simple. Winter winds passing across the leaf surface cause evaporation—the plants lose water. The water must be replaced or the plant will become dehydrated and die. If the soil is frozen, there is no chance of replenishing the water naturally. Therefore it is up to us to supply that water.

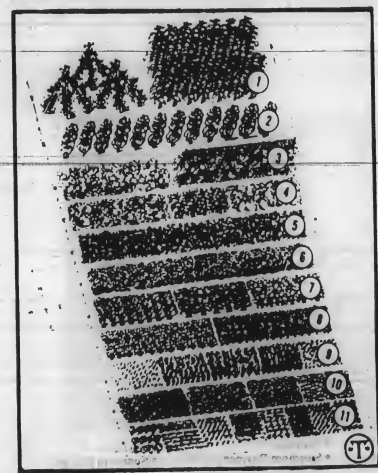

One of the most devastating types of cold damage is bark splitting. This injury can occur on large trees as well as shrubs.

The primary cause is the temperature difference between the air and the tissue inside the bark. On a sunny winter's day, a plant will take up a lot of water. When the temperature drops suddenly in the night all that water inside the bark freezes, and it cracks the bark open.

You may not notice the effects of bark splitting injury until the next summer. If we experience a drought, and the plant is under moisture stress, the damaged tissue inside the bark simply cannot move enough moisture through the plant. The result may be that the plant dies for lack of water. Wrapping the bark of newly planted trees with tree wrap substantially reduces this type of cold damage.

Many people believe that planting a cold-susceptible plant on the south side of their house will protect it from winter injury. After all, the south side is the warmest side, right? Well, it is the warmest side, but it is not a good place to plant susceptible shrubs. The sunny warmth will tend to fool a plant into thinking winter is a long way off. The plant will not have hardened off by the time the big freeze arrives. Cold damage will likely be the result. It is much better to select northern exposures that hasten the hardening process and smooth out temperature variations.

Caution is the watchword here. If you have some shrubs covered with chocolate brown leaves from this last temperature drop, don't give them up for dead. Keep up necessary watering, prune them back when the weather warms up, fertilize if necessary and then just wait. You may be pleasantly surprised!

A basic community garden layout containing several mini-gardens.

Plan a community garden

If you'd like to have a garden this summer, but don't have the space to plant as much as you want to, you might consider getting together with your neighbors and planting a community garden that you can all enjoy.

Here's a plan designed for a 25-foot by 30-foot area, that is made up of a variety of mini-gardens.

By row, it goes like this:
1. Three teepees of pole beans and four half rows of corn.
2. Full row of staked or trellised tomatoes.

3. Half row of bush summer squash or zucchini. Half row of trellised cucumbers.

4. Bush snap beans: half row of green, half row of yellow.

5. Two early varieties of peas: one early, one later.

6. Half row each of carrots and chard.

7. Any combination of leeks, shallots or garlic.

8. Spinach and a couple of varieties of head lettuce.

9. Herbs, such as parsley, chives and dill.

How To Write A Classified Ad That Works

Be Complete. Put yourself in the reader's place. If you were considering buying this item, what would you want to know about it? Give the item's age, condition, use, brand name, and any other important information needed. And don't forget to include the price! Ads that list prices will get classified choppers' attention first.

Avoid Abbreviations. A few accepted and recognizable abbreviations are OK, but an ad full of them confuses the reader. They will go on to the next ad rather than trying to decipher yours. A good rule of thumb is, "Spell it out or leave it out!"

Be Available. List your telephone number and/or address so that the prospect will know how to contact you. State the best hours to call, too—if you're not home when a potential buyer calls, chances are they will not call back.

Feel free to ask for help, because help is free for the asking and that's why we're here. Our staff are experienced professionals and they know the information and action words that will help make the sale. Call 547-4571 for help with your classified ad.

Council reverses Planning Commission zoning denial

VIRGINIA BEACH—A parcel of land of less than an acre in a residential area west of Princess Anne Road south of Baxter Road, has been zoned O-1 Office District.

City Council, following a lengthy discussion recently unanimously approved the rezoning which was opposed by area residents and recommended for denial by the Planning commission and planning staff.

The request was made by the Catholic Family and Children's Service which will locate its Virginia Beach headquarters at the site. The site is part of the 9.94-acre parcel occupied by the Church of the Ascension.

According to City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck the zoning places an island of commercial zoning in an area of established residential.

The applicant agreed to restrict by a legal agreement the use of the property to the Catholic Family and Children's Service.

Residents had expressed concern that the rezoning would set a precedent for further commercial zoning and increase the traffic in the neighborhood.

Wanted: German Shepherds

RICHMOND—The Department of State Police has requested the assistance of Virginia citizens in locating German shepherds for its canine program.

Specifically, State Police are looking for owners interested in donating male German shepherds, one to two years of age, no less than 70 pounds in weight and no less than 25 inches in height. In instances where a donated dog fails to complete the training program, the dog may be returned to the owner at his or her request.

The Department's canine program originated in 1961 with five handlers and their dogs. A highly successful program, it has now been expanded to include 19 handlers and dogs.

German shepherd owners interested in donating dogs meeting the above specifications are requested to contact Sergeant D. G. Hendley at the Training Academy in Richmond, 804-323-2169, or their nearest State Police office.

Cult novels reach the screen

parently not been daunted by the publicity received by the much criticized movie. Having read Dune just previous to viewing the screen version, I am offering here a few personal reactions. The producer seems to have weighed two basic choices in screening Dune. He could present a version which emphasized the visual, the ambience and flavor of Dune, or he could present the intellectual, emotional and interior Dune. Both could not be offered within the confines of a feature film of manageable length.

I must credit the industry for presenting a Dune which, to my mind, is almost always visually correct and interesting. The feudal, technologically static civilization is accurately shown. The characters look quite close to the mental images formed during my reading. What is singularly lacking is the emotion, warmth, psychological growth and motivational force of the characters. The power of the book is in its intense intellectual exercise, its graphic portrayal of the power of the mind and the individual's ability to control and develop that power. Yet, the producers were honest. They made a choice and stayed with it. Character development was not their vision. For that singleness of purpose, they should be commended rather than condemned.

Perhaps the novel would have lent itself more readily to a multi-segment television mini-series in which the various nuances of the work could have been presented and explored. In retrospect, perhaps cult novels should not be brought to the screen. Perhaps because they are cult novels, they become so internalized that the very creation of them in the visual sense invites us to say "that's not the way it was". In truth, we are saying that that's not the way it was for us. The print word and the video image form a duality in which the elements complement, rather than replace, one another. Perhaps, then, it is important to enjoy the movie in its visual sense and then return to our individual, private Dunes through the printed word.

Hospital seeks City help in obstetrics care

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf asked about establishing a residency program at Virginia Beach General. She said that Riverside in Newport News has such a program.

Dr. G.C. Sjolund, Public Health director, said that the Eastern Virginia Medical Authority program cannot be expanded and that the Riverside residents come from the Medical College of Virginia.

Dr. J.J. Krueger, chief of staff at Virginia Beach General, said that in a residency program it is important to serve the trainee; it's not a way of getting "slave labor." He said that a hospital like Virginia Beach General that does not have residents across the board is not a good hospital for single residencies. He said to have a true residency program would require as much money as paying for the deliveries.

As it is, he said, the staff at Virginia Beach General has to do all the work with no help, a "severe and unrealistic burden." Other hospitals in the city do not have obstetrical care.

Rivera said that EVMA has made overtures to Virginia Beach General, but apparently philosophies are in conflict. Rivera said it's a matter of who does what or whether an obstetrician or a family practitioner should deliver.

Oberndorf asked whether the staff had considered midwifery. Krueger said that a difference of opinion exists within the department. "We pride ourselves with being a high class hospital. Everyone has special certifications. We want the procedures done by qualified physicians," he said, "the most qualified people to do whatever procedures are done."

Krueger said that generally in the medical profession the feeling is that indigent people are a community responsibility, not the responsibility of sick people who must pay extra so that the system can take care of indigents.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan asked how many doctors contribute their time to charity work.

Krueger said that many physicians work part-time in clinics.

Sjolund said that at Virginia Beach General Hospital, the staff has to take care of the patients for nothing, while at the Health Department, all the physicians who participate are paid.

Dr. Philip Turner, an obstetrician at Virginia Beach General, said midwives can deliver in normal births, but a doctor still will have to be on call to handle complications.

"What you're saying is you're all protecting your own bailiwick," said Councilwoman Reba McClanahan.

Turner replied that he was delivered by a midwife, but that in those times, this was usual. He said it was not uncommon to hear about a mother who had died. The death rate was high, but at that time it was considered a normal occurrence. Today, the death of a mother giving birth is very unusual, he said. He said that doctors try "to protect ourselves" in legal ways, but "I do hope the main concern is that these people will be treated like anyone else."

Oberndorf also expressed an interest in developing a continuing care program for mothers which will find the same agencies seeing them through pre-natal and post-natal care and delivery. The immediate need is for a means to reimburse the attending obstetricians for their services, Rivera said.

Reid named first team All-American Kempsville scorer scores again!

Virginia places seven on A-A team

NEW YORK, NY—Virginia, with seven athletes on the squad, dominates the 28th Annual Parade Magazine High School All-America Basketball Team, a team which includes Kempsville High's J.R. Reid.

Forty-four players from 18 states and the District of Columbia were selected to the squad in collaboration with top college coaches, scouts and recruiters nationwide. Danny Ferry of DeMatha Catholic High School in Hyattsville, Maryland was selected as the top prep basketball player in the nation.

The seven Virginia athletes named are: Rodney Strickland and Michael Jones, both hailing from Oak Hill Academy in Mouth of Wilson; J.R. Reid from Kempsville in Virginia Beach; Kevin Madden, a repeater from last year's squad, from Robert E. Lee in Staunton; Walker Lambiotte from Central H.S. in Woodstock; Dennis Scott of Flint Hall Prep in Oakton and Richard Morgan from Salem H.S. in Salem.

Past Parade All-American selections include Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who was a three-time selectee; Earvin "Magic" Johnson; Isaiah Thomas; Ralph Sampson; Pat Ewing and, going back several years—in the past, Dave DeBusschere, current vice-president of the New York Knicks; U.S. Senator Bill Bradley of the State of New Jersey who performed for several years with the New York Knicks, and Moses Malone.

Members of the boys' first team will have their pictures reproduced, full life size, and they will be displayed on the Parade High School Wall located in the Basketball Hall of Fame.

Indigent patients

VBGH assured $ for obstetric care

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

VIRGINIA BEACH—Physicians who serve indigent obstetrical patients at Virginia Beach General Hospital have been assured of payment by the city for the remainder of the fiscal year.

However, City Council members are not convinced that obstetrical or other medical care is a local responsibility.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said Monday afternoon that she did not want her support of the funding to July 1 to be construed as a concession that the care of indigents is a local responsibility. She said that Council was "under the gun" and was forced to take some kind of action for the rest of the year. Obstetricians at the hospital had threatened to leave the hospital rather than continue to serve the indigent patients with only partial or no reimbursement.

Under the program proposed by Hector A. Rivera, assistant city manager, the city would reimburse the obstetricians up to $500 a delivery after deducting the amount the patient could pay and the amount provided by other programs such as Medicaid.

The program would cost $300,000 for a year with $100,000 coming from the state. The $75,000 needed to finish out the present year was transferred from $150,000 included in the current budget for five midwife positions to aid in the hospital delivery of uncomplicated births by medically-indigent obstetrical patients. The midwife program failed to answer the problem because of the need for obstetricians to be on call.

Council approved the transfer of funds by a vote of 7-4 with Councilmen H. Jack Jennings Jr., Robert G. Jones, Louis R. Jones and Councilwoman Reba McClanahan dissenting.

A motion by Jennings to defer the question failed by the same vote. Jennings wanted more information on the matter.

A concern of Council was that the allocation of funds for obstetricians would be a precedent. See OBSTETRICAL, page 6

23rd annual

Norwegian Lady ceremony to be held in Virginia Beach

VIRGINIA BEACH—The 23rd Annual Norwegian Lady Ceremony will be held on Saturday, March 30, at 2 p.m. at 25th Street and Oceanfront, the site of the Norwegian Lady statue. This ceremony has been conducted by the Virginia Beach Volunteer Fire Department Ladies Auxiliary since 1962 when the statue was dedicated.

The ceremony is held annually to commemorate the 1891 sinking of the Norwegian bark, the Dictator off the Virginia Beach coast. In 1962 the people of Moss, Norway, Virginia Beach's sister city, placed the Norwegian Lady statue at its present site to ensure "safe passage to all men of the sea." An identical statue exists in Moss. The ceremony will include the reading of the history of the Norwegian Lady and the casting of flowers upon the water in memory of those who lost their lives on the bark Dictator.

For further information, Sun readers should contact Carolyn Gray, Ladies Auxiliary, 428-5110.

It's love!

Perhaps we exaggerate this encounter between one of the visually handicapped children from Virginia Beach who visited the Ringling Bros. & Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows under the sponsorship of the Virginia Department for the Visually Handicapped. The visitors were allowed to touch, pull, pat, sniff, and visit the clowns after a performance. Sun correspondent Janet Yarbrough Meyer was there and you will find her story on page 3.

Cooperative Education

One of the functions of Tidewater Community College is to prepare students for the "real world" of employment. Accepting and carrying out the responsibilities of a job are qualities which cannot be taught in the classroom, but which are essential to success in the work environment.

Cooperative education is a program which allows TCC students to learn about the responsibilities of work in their chosen fields while earning pay and academic credit for work performed in private business and industry. The work must relate to the student's curriculum of study.

Through the Cooperative Education program, private firms hire TCC students, usually on a part-time basis, to perform the work of a regular employee. The student and employer work out a program of concrete goals which the students must meet during the academic quarter in order for TCC to award academic credit for successful completion of the work.

Many Tidewater Community College students are already working when they enter college. Through the Co-op program, these students may earn credit for their work if it is related to their curriculum. If a student is interested in Cooperative Education but does not have a curriculum-related job, the Co-op Department will assist the student in finding a job.

The student can participate in Cooperative Education as part of full-time or part-time study. In fact, because of the schedule of work and classes, many TCC Co-op students attend classes part-time.

One obvious advantage of the Co-op program is the "real life" experience it affords the student. Many college graduates find themselves eventually in jobs not related to what they studied in college, simply because they did not realize what their work would involve until they began work af-

Clowns juggling. Bands playing. Tigers roaring. Elephants dancing. People flying. The spot lights stop and darkness becomes day in arena number one. The Ringling Bros. & Barnum & Bailey combined circus is a visual extravaganza, but for a very special group of children the circus was a "touching" experience. These children, mostly from the Pembroke Meadows School in Virginia Beach, are blind.

Being visually handicapped did not seem to hamper the field trip, which was sponsored by the Virginia Department for the Visually Handicapped. The smells, sounds, and excitement of being at the circus was evident on their curious faces. The time spent with the clowns at the close of the show was special, too.

The children got to touch clown shoes and noses, pull their braids and pat their wigs, and sit, wrapped in strong arms, on the lap of a clown. Their visit to the circus also included a touch tour where the children were allowed to touch costumes, props, and instruments that were used in the show. These children got to experience the circus in a very special way.

Meanwhile in arena three a different group of special children were enjoying the end of the circus in a way peculiar to them. This group came from the Gymstrada School of Gymnastics, and on this day, they, like Mary Martin in Peter Pan, were learning to fly.

These children had come to the circus with the hope of working with the acrobats on the teeter board. Strapped with a leather belt that was suspended on ropes, these children were catapulted into the air as one of the men from the troupe of acrobats hit the teeter board. Constantin, a very animated and enthusiastic teacher with the Constantin Troupe, guided the children in their flights. Other members from the different troupes worked with the children on gymnastic and tumbling skills.

Rezoning is denied

By Lee Cahill

VIRGINIA BEACH—Vincent J. and Janet F. Losciale wanted to divide their property in Acredale so that they could build a larger home for their family of four children and still have their present smaller home for one of the children to use later.

To do what they wanted to do, the Loscials needed a variance. The lot on which the new house would have been built would contain 15,000 square feet which conforms to the lot area requirement in Acredale. The other lot at 1221 Olive Road, would be 10,000 square feet and would not meet the area requirement.

Kempsville Councilman Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr. said that "these are the ones which make this job hard." He said he liked Losciale and what he wanted to do, but that he had to think about the other neighbors.

Tom Wilkerson, who represented area residents, objected. He said that one of the attractions of the area is the size of the lots.

The request for a variance was denied by a vote of 9-2 with Councilmen H. Jack Jennings Jr. and Robert Fentress dissenting.

Beach resident Bernard Barrow was recently appointed to the Virginia Court of Appeals. The former Circuit Court judge views this newly-created court as the best recent innovation in the Virginia court system.

"First of all, obviously its purpose is to make the appellate process more accessible to more people—in other words, to give more litigants the opportunity to have their cases reviewed on an appellate basis than we have in the past," Barrow said during an interview in his office.

Barrow said the new court, sandwiched between the Circuit and Virginia Supreme Court, may also assist in the development of judicial policy-making decisions.

Barrow said he hopes these precedent policy-making decisions will increase with the creation of the new court. He added that another benefit is that it may also give the bar an opportunity to further develop their skills.

"There is quite a bit of difference between trial court work and appellate work so far as a lawyer is concerned," Barrow said. "Not having as much access to appellate review has limited the opportunity that lawyers have to develop their skills in the area. This hopefully will expand those opportunities and make our bar that much more professional," Barrow said.

"I think the public's perception of the judicial system, in terms of their complaints, is probably (one of) delay and complexity of management. The courts have a certain amount of mystery and mystique about them anyway. People don't know what's happening."

In comparing his former position as a trial court judge to his new appellate court role, Barrow said, "I think there are a lot of subtle differences."

"I think the appellate court judge's role is much narrower than the trial court judge's role. In essence, the appellate court judge has to be able to think clearly and write clearly."

"On the other hand," he added, "the trial court judge has to be able to think clearly, write clearly, preside over, organize, and form a dispute-resolving mechanism involving lay people as witnesses, as clients, as litigants, and as jurors."

"The trial court judge has got to have a great deal more knowledge at his fingertips," Barrow explained. "He doesn't have the luxury of taking time to resolve what the law is in every instance. See BARROW, page 7

U.S. Savings Bonds. Now paying 10.94%.

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay like money market accounts! At the current rate—10.94%—you could double your money in less than seven years. Just hold Bonds for five years and you get the new higher variable rates. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. Savings Bonds are still as safe as ever. They're still exempt from state and local income taxes. And since Bonds cost as little as $25, they're as affordable as ever. What's more, Bonds remain a great way to keep your country strong.

You can purchase Bonds almost anywhere. At neighborhood banks, savings and loans and credit unions. Or easier still, right through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

Variable rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least 5 years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn variable rates when held beyond 10/1/87. Bonds held less than 5 years earn lower interest.

Princess Anne Commercial Bank

New Beach Bank nearing operational status

VIRGINIA BEACH—A group of Virginia Beach businessmen has announced plans to launch a new financial institution that they say will offer customized services not previously available in Tidewater.

The new bank will be named Princess Anne Commercial Bank and will be located on Lynnhaven Parkway in Oceana West Industrial Park.

"When the Princess Anne Commercial Bank opens this summer," said Homer W. Cunningham, chairman of the board of the proposed bank, "it will most likely attract the commercial customer who likes to have influence with his lender and the more discriminating depositor who requires more than the average banking services."

"We realize that the major advantage to this kind of bank is the personal relationship our clients establish with their banker and his staff," says Cunningham. "The individuals we will be dealing with are the decision-makers. They are people who appreciate the amenities. They'll be on a first-name basis with the bank's president and his staff.

The bank expects to open in July. Its offices will be at 641 Lynnhaven Parkway.

Daily operations will be supervised by the president, and policies will be determined by a nine-member board of directors headed by Cunningham. Other board members will include William J. Davenport III, Russell A. Gills Jr., Henry C. Morgan Jr., and Daniel N. Ryan. Four additional board members will be elected soon.

Cunningham said that the bank's president has not yet been chosen. "We are moving slowly in making our final choice," he says. "The individual we select will have substantial banking expertise and will be committed to the philosophy of this new entity," he emphasized.

Princess Anne Commercial Bank will be a member of a network of small banks called Independent Banks of Virginia. The network concept enables each bank to make larger loans and provide additional services. Cunningham noted that Independent Banks of Virginia President C. Phillips Kraemer will offer administrative support and assistance during the startup for Princess Anne Commercial Bank. "Kraemer's knowledge of the community bank system will surely prove invaluable during initial stages," he remarked.

Kraemer said that $2 million in equity capital will be raised by Independent Banks of Virginia with an offering in April of $1.5 million in stock. Independent Banks of Virginia will also provide the additional $500,000 in equity infusion.

Princess Anne Commercial Bank will be the first local bank to open in Hampton Roads in seven years.

New McDonald's

VIRGINIA BEACH—Rezoning approved Monday afternoon by City Council will permit the location of a McDonald's restaurant at the southwest corner of Holland Road and Chimney Hill Parkway in the Kempsville Borough.

Rose Hall Associates were granted the rezoning by a vote of 10-0 from O-1 Office District to B-2 Community-Business District on a one-acre parcel.

Councilman Louis R. Jones was absent.

Bank continues organizational drive

VIRGINIA BEACH—The Bank of Tidewater's public stock offering of 400,000 shares has been oversubscribed by more than 25,000 shares, according to a spokesman. The stock, sold at $10 per share, was placed on the market February 12, and was sold out by March 8.

Burt Harrison, president of the newly organized bank, attributed the response to widespread public interest in locally owned and managed financial institutions.

The Bank plans to open in mid-to-late summer in the Hilltop area of Virginia Beach.

First tools for garden

Pencil and paper are the best tools to start a garden.

Plan the garden in writing before the first soil is turned to make the most efficient use of the space, says Virginia Tech Extension home horticulturist Diane Relf.

Start by making a list of the vegetables to be grown in the garden. Be sure to consider the likes and dislikes of the family and how much of the produce is to be consumed fresh.

Keep in mind the amount you want of a vegetable, too, she says, remembering that some vegetables such as zucchini grow abundantly.

Group the crops according to height of the plant to prevent one from shading another. Put the tall plants on the north side of the garden. Group the quick maturing crops together so that when they are harvested, other vegetables can be planted in that space.

Keep perennial crops such as asparagus and rhubarb in a special area so that the soil can be worked without disturbing that area.

Practice crop rotation, she says. Rotate crops so that each area of the garden not only has a different crop than that of the previous year, but one from a different family of plants. This practice helps avoid soil-borne diseases that attack the plants of the same family, while another type of plant may be resistant.

Organic gardening

Organic gardening is a challenge that many Virginia home gardeners are trying.

By learning to mulch and assess what level of insect damage can be tolerated, home gardeners can grow an abundant harvest and reduce the use of chemicals which add cost to gardening.

Some past studies have shown that home gardeners often overused chemicals. Now there seems to be a trend involving many home gardeners to minimize the use of chemicals everywhere around the home and use methods that will enrich the soil and create a healthy environment for vigorous growing plants.

Now there seems to be a trend involving many home gardeners to minimize the use of chemicals everywhere around the home and use methods that will enrich the soil and create a healthy environment for vigorous growing plants.

Successful organic gardens require very fertile soil and adding organic matter to the soil is a fundamental step, said John Luna, Virginia Tech Extension entomologist who has been an organic gardener for more than 15 years.

"Adding organic matter to the soil, in the form of animal manures, grass clippings, leaves, or other materials, does several things for the garden. Water holding capacity, air infiltration rates, tilth, as well as soil fertility are increased. And, as a bonus, many soil-borne plant diseases are controlled," he said.

One excellent way of getting useful organic matter and of recycling household garbage is to build a compost pile. One of the simplest composting techniques, said Luna, is to start with a small heap of mixed grass clippings, leaves, soil and household garbage. A small amount of nitrogen fertilizer will help stimulate microbial activity which decomposes the heap. Stir the pile oc-asionally to add air. To minimize undesirable odors, always mix garbage or other organic materials into the pile each time they are added, Luna suggested.

As the compost pile matures, it will become dark in color, and more uniform in texture, and is ready to add to the garden.

But compost will seldom provide enough organic matter for the average gardener, Luna said. "Leaves are one of our most wasted resources. Cover your garden with them in the fall about six inches thick. Then in the spring, merely pull back the leaves and plant into the undisturbed soil. This will allow early planting without tilling."

Luna suggested that for a first organic garden, a small amount of fertilizer such as 10-10-10 be worked into the soil to help make the transition to the higher levels of fertility needed when the garden is still new. There are organic fertilizers such as cottonseed meal, bloodmeal and bone meal, but these are not often available at most garden stores and must be ordered from mail-order suppliers.

Mulching is a good way to control weeds. Place a mulch up to the base of the garden plants to control the weeds that are still in the soil. The mulch can be either organic or inorganic. If it is organic such as clippings or leaves, pile it about two to four inches thick. The mulch, in addition to controlling weeds, helps conserve soil moisture.

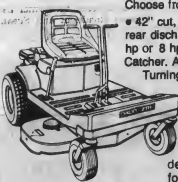

When an organic mulch is used, the organic matter will break down, adding nutrients and improving the soil structure and fertility. The few weeds that do make it through a mulch layer are easily pulled, since their roots tend to grow near the surface under the mulch.

Learn about garden insects, Luna said. Some insects feed on only one kind of plant and don't bother others. Some are problems in only one stage of development. Home gardeners can tolerate a fair amount of damage and still reap a bountiful harvest.

Practical nursing class graduates from Vo-Tech

VIRGINIA BEACH—Sixteen students who have completed 18 months of practical nursing training will graduate from the Virginia Beach School of Practical Nursing Thursday, March 21. The graduation exercise will be held at 8 p.m. at Plaza Junior High School on South Lynhaven Road.

Guests at the graduation will include Rita B. Wood, executive vice president of Virginia Beach General Hospital; Dorothy R. Chrostowski, RN, director of nursing at Humana Hospital-Bayside; Christine Busch, RN, assistant administrator for nursing at Children's Hospital of the King's Daughters; and Jerry F. Deviney, area team director for Virginia Beach Public Schools. Guest speaker will be William G. Moosha, principal of the Virginia Beach Vocational-Technical Education Center, where the practical nursing program is based.

Shortly after their graduation, the students will take the state-administered examination to obtain a license as a practical nurse. The Vo-Tech practical nursing graduates traditionally do well on the licensing exam; the students from last year's class scored high enough to place the Virginia Beach program in the top three throughout the state.

Mildred Dozier, director of the nursing program, says graduates of the course usually find immediate employment in a variety of local medical facilities, such as hospitals, nursing homes, clinics, doctors' offices, home health care agencies, federal agencies, and private duty. "Many continue up the career ladder to become registered nurses by attending nursing programs at local colleges and hospitals," said Dozier.

The 18-month practical nursing program begins each August, open to adults and high school seniors. It is designed to prepare students to take the state licensing examination for practical nurses. Tuition averages less than $30 a month, and students have to purchase uniforms and some medical equipment, plus rent textbooks.

"The course is really quite a bargain," said Dozier. "Some other school divisions in the state charge as much as $3,000 for the same adult LPN instruction."

The program is divided into two phases - pre-clinical and clinical. The class which started last August will enter the clinical phase this month, receiving on-the-job training at Virginia Beach General Hospital, Humana Hospital-Bayside, and Children's Hospital of the King's Daughters, as well as additional classroom instruction. Students receive instruction from doctors and licensed nurses in pediatrics,

Temporary Obstetrical support promised

Continued from page 1 opening the way for support to be expected from the city for other medical disciplines.

Jennings wanted to know at what income level a person was considered indigent. Dr. J. W. Knispel, president of the medical staff at Virginia Beach General and an obstetrician, had mentioned the fact that some people who use the city's clinic have salaries of over $20,000 and some of over $30,000. He explained later that these patients are required to pay.

The classification of indigents is determined by federal guidelines, Rivera said.

Jennings said that what's right for New York and Boston may not be right for Virginia Beach. Jennings also referred to "the $30 or $40 million surplus" the State has. He suggested that the State find money for the program in the surplus.

He also said that the Eastern Virginia Medical Authority which operates Norfolk General Hospital, has some responsibility. The patients had been served by Norfolk General and DePaul Hospitals until 1981 when Norfolk General informed Virginia Beach that it would take only the high risk obstetrical patients.

Since Virginia Beach General is the only hospital in Virginia Beach with obstetrical care, the burden fell on that hospital and its obstetricians.

Councilman Louis R. Jones, who is in the funeral business, said that one of the costs of doing business is doing a certain amount of charity work in the community. "He does not see much help coming from the State because of past experience. He said the State has the attitude that 'Virginia Beach has a lot of money. Let them go and fund it.'"

He also said that if the city is going to give any money to the problem it should give it to the hospital.

"In my business, I do a certain amount of charity work. I think doctors ought to do the same thing...I'm not willing to pay the

Is afternoon court in Virginia Beach's future?

VIRGINIA BEACH—"At 1:30 in the afternoon the courtrooms are like a tomb. Nobody's in there," remarked Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. at a recent Council meeting.

Instead of spending $7, $8 or $9 million on new courtrooms, he asked, why not have afternoon court, or evening court?

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said the question came up a year or two ago, and no one was interested in having court at any other time.

The question comes up periodically whenever more space is needed for the courts. The end is always the same because, as Mayor Harold Heischberger said, "We furnish the money; they tell us how they're going to run the shop."

Time short on photography contest

VIRGINIA BEACH—Less than two weeks are left for amateur photographers to enter the Nation of Readers photography contest being sponsored by the Virginia Beach Public Library until the deadline of March 30.

Intended to show the importance of reading in American life, the contest is open to all ages, and local winners will automatically be entered in the American Library Association's national contest, and announced in Chicago during ALA's national conference, July 6-11, 1985. Top winners in the national contest will receive $1000, $500, and $250, respectively.

Entry forms are available at all libraries and the bookmobile. For more information, readers should contact Mary K. Chelton at 427-4321.

Two out, nobody on...

Continued from page 2 hopper to the infield cut-off man (or rather over the head of my infielder). Mercifully, the side was finally struck out.

Two calm innings followed. They were hitting so many over the fence I had no opportunity to repeat my miff, and was beginning to feel better when my first at-bat rolled around.

There wasn't much pressure as we were behind 22-0 by the time I came to bat with two out in the ninth. I dug in at the plate and squinted at the pitcher, who may well have been sneering over there in the dark. Four straight pitches at my head put me in the dirt, and won a walk to first base. The next batter popped one up that the second sacker and the shortstop argued over who would catch, so I moved to third while it dropped between them. Now I was a scoring threat. I took a lead. Strike one, on a swing. Strike two, right down the middle. I increased my lead. The pitcher's leg went up and the ball streaked across the plate and through the catcher's legs.

"STEAL!" the coach yelled. "STEAL!" the crowd hollered.

I ran down the baseline on wobbly legs, heading for glory and home plate, heart-in-mouth, picking them up and laying them down.

"Only to be tagged out by the pitcher, who ran to cover the plate."

"Why didn't you slide?" my mother asked me. I wondered about being a musician or something when I grew up. I decided not to be a baseball hero.

The lure of the trail

By Addie Eldridge
Staff Writer

The Appalachian mountains; they're over two thousand miles long and over five hundred miles rest within Virginia borders. For years, these beautiful mountains have lured nature enthusiasts to experience their splendor.

Between Maine and Georgia there are about thirty-three Appalachian Trailclubs. Each has its very own "corner" of the mountain range. Of the thirty-three, the Tidewater club is the furthest away but mountain lovers have managed to make it work.

Herb Coleman, a Virginia Beach resident and Tidewater club president, explained, "The main function of our club is to maintain and supervise our section which extends about ten miles from Reed's Gap to the Tide River and the blue trails off from it. Altogether, that's about 16-17 miles."

The Tidewater club has been extant since April 27, 1972. Thirty environmentalists met in Virginia Beach on that day. Since then, the club has expanded to include all of Tidewater and almost 300 members.

By acting as guides, creating trails and shelters, the club has made the perils of these mountains seem less dangerous, even made the journey more accessible to Tidewater residents.

The club has agreed to work on a project in Seashore State Park, located in Virginia Beach. Volunteers are always needed in this effort, to blaze trails, making the trail route.

Last year, over thirty planned trips were made including local and mountain hiking, bicycling, overnight camping trips in either the club's cabin or in a pitched tent. Almost every weekend, members return to the mountains for a visit.

The Tidewater Appalachian Trailclub will hold their regular meeting on Wednesday, March 20 at 7:30 p.m. in the Church of the Advent on 9620 Norfolk Avenue in Norfolk. This program will be about warm weather hiking equipment. For further information, call 467-6378, 467-2461 or 596-5136.

On March 23, there will be a five to six mile day hike at Back Bay Wildlife Refuge. Interested parties should plan to bring lunch and water to the refuge parking lot at 10 a.m. Sun readers should call 481-9124 for further information.

What can one do with an eggplant?

Do you ever look at those peculiar things called eggplants and wonder what to do with them? I used to think they were only good for eggplant parmesan, but have been discovering some interesting recipes recently. These two come from The Vegetarian Epicure by Anna Thomas, Vintage Books, 1972. The first one has an Italian flair and the second, Indian. Two very different tastes from one very strange vegetable.

Eggplant Pasta Sauce

1/4 cup olive oil
2 to 3 garlic cloves
1 medium eggplant (about 1 lb.)
2 green bell peppers
3 cups peeled and chopped tomatoes
1/2 to 3/4 cup sliced black olives
3 to 4 tablespoons capers
1 tsp. crushed oregano
1/2 tsp. crushed basil salt to taste

lots of fresh ground black pepper
12 oz. tomato paste
2 cups dry white wine

Heat the olive oil in a large skillet. Mince the garlic or put it through a press, and add it to the olive oil. Let it heat gently while you prepare the eggplant. Wash the eggplant first, then chop it very thoroughly, without peeling. Seed and dice the green peppers. Add the peppers, eggplant, tomatoes, olives, and capers to the oil. Stir well until the oil is evenly coating all the vegetables. Now add the remaining ingredients, stir again, and cover the skillet. Lower the heat to a very small flame and allow the sauce to simmer gently for about an hour. Stir occasionally to keep any of it from scorching, and add more wine or water if it gets too thick. Makes about 2 quarts of sauce.

Chow Line

By Julie Storeide

Curry of Eggplant and Peas

1 large eggplant (at least 1 lb.)
1 large russet potato

1/4 onion
3 tablespoons butter
1/2 tsp. cumin seeds
1 tsp. tumeric, powdered
1/4 tsp. cayenne pepper
1/2 tsp. mustard seeds
1 cup water
1 1/2 cups fresh shelled peas
1/2 cup yogurt

Wash the eggplant and, without peeling it, slice it about 3/4 inch thick. Salt the slices heavily and set them aside for at least 1/2 hour. The excess water will gradually work its way out, and the eggplant will thus absorb much less fat. Peel and cube the potato and chop the onion.

Rinse the eggplant slices very quickly and press out the water. Cut into large cubes. Heat the butter in a large skillet and add 1/4 teaspoon salt and the spices. When they are all hot, stir in the onion and potatoes, toss them around a little, then add the water and cover tightly. After about 20 minutes, remove the cover, add the eggplant, peas, and yogurt, and stir well. Continue simmering for another 10 to 15 minutes, stirring often. Serve over rice to four people.

Band parents meet

Items on the agenda will include the Summer Band camp, the scholarship fund report, and the report of the Nominating Committee. All parents of the band and guard are expected to attend.

Singles' dance

Single adults are invited to a dance on Saturday, March 23 at 9 p.m. to be held at Pembroke Manor Community Center, Hinsdale Street and Bennett Lane, in the Pembroke area of Virginia Beach.

Cost is $3 per person. This dance is sponsored by the Singles Friendship Club.

Lake Smith club meets

The Lake Smith Terrace garden club will meet on Tuesday, March 26, at 7:30 p.m. at the Bayside Presbyterian Church on Independence Boulevard. The program will be given by Helen Lukins. Her topic will be "Wild Flowers".

The Garden Club recently held an anniversary dinner where special guests were honored. Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Crane of Brimfield Ave. have been volunteers maintaining the entrance at Ewell Road to the Lake Smith Terrace community. The Cranes were given a "Hats Off Salute" for their good neighbor efforts.

Barrow joins new court

Sometimes you can, but often times he has got to know immediately what the answers are, or hope that he does."

Barrow said the trial court judge also has to have a wide knowledge of the law. "There are so many more things, areas of the law, that a trial court judge is confronted with than an appellate court is not: administration of estates, appointment of guardians for disabled people. Things of this sort occasionally reach the appellate level, but more often than not, do not. They are usually taken care of at the trial court level.

"The trial judge has to know procedural requirements," he continued. "So, in one sense, in terms of breadth of scope (and) the skills demanded, the trial court judge faces many more challenges."

Judges are faced with decisions that can alter people's lives. In Barrow's view, "Every now and then you sense a feeling of responsibility that you don't think you ought to have. It is the power you have over an individual life. It is sometimes awesome.

"Most of the time that is not in your mind on a day to day basis," he added. "Every now and then you do get confronted with a case where it strikes you."

"A trial court judge has immense power," Barrow observed. "An appellate court judge has no such thing. They (appellate court judges) have to have a group decision. They can't do anything individually, or very little individually. The trial court judge is all on his or her own.

Barrow feels at ease in his judicial role.

"I think that most of the time I've felt very comfortable as a judge because I've felt I was doing a fairly good job at what I was doing.

"There were those days," he recalled, "when I got off the bench and shook my head and said that was a bad one. Most of the time I felt comfortable with what I was doing because I felt I was doing it fairly well."

"To be able to deal with a complex case, work out the problems, and reach a decision is very satisfying to me."

Barrow said he enjoyed his trial court work.

"In terms of the activity of the court, I guess the most pleasing thing for a trial court judge is to observe those cases where you have got very skilled, well prepared lawyers doing a good job. That is a very satisfying experience because it makes the judge's job a lot easier.

"There is also just a great deal of satisfaction seeing the system work the way it is supposed to work," he said, "and seeing lawyers who have the professional pride and self-esteem to do high quality work."

"On the other hand, lawyers who are ill-prepared or who are discourteous to each other or to witnesses...probably upset me as much as anything."

Barrow said he is rarely upset by the individual litigants themselves, observing, "their attitudes and reactions are generally emotionally caused, naive in a sense that they are not accustomed to the judicial process. So, what they say or do doesn't often upset me."

Barrow's peers have described him as thoughtful, sincere, and intellectual. Beach attorney Richard Brydges said Barrow "is totally dedicated to the judicial system as he thinks it should be. He believes in the system but thinks it ought to work the way he thinks it ought to work."

"He is dedicated to human rights," Brydges added. "We are going to miss him."

Jaycees taking nominations for Beach First Citizen

VIRGINIA BEACH—Paul Anninos, chairman of the 1985 First Citizen Award Committee for the Virginia Beach Jaycees, has announced that the Jaycees are now accepting nominations for the Thirty-fifth (35th) Annual First Citizen of Virginia Beach Award.

The First Citizen's Award is perhaps the most prestigious award given to a Virginia Beach citizen. It is presented to the individual who has made outstanding contributions in their profession and who has unselfishly devoted their time and energies in service to their community.

Following selection, the recipient is honored at a banquet attended by past recipients, state and local dignitaries, invited guests, and interested citizens. This year's banquet will be held in early May, 1985.

The Jaycees wish all individuals and organizations to submit nominations in writing, with supporting materials to: Paul J. Anninos, chairman, First Citizen Award Committee, 229 68th Street, Virginia Beach, Virginia, 23451.

The deadline for nominations is Friday, April 5.

appropriated $143,393 for the construction of a modular building a house the Law Library and Juvenile probation offices and necessary renovations to existing offices. The construction of the new Juvenile Court Building and the addition of a Circuit Court Judge necessitated the relocation of the library and portions of the probation department.

David Grochmal, director of the Department of General Services, said that the temporary buildings (five buildings which will look like one) will be in use for two-and-a-half years.

The buildings will take up an area of 56 by 50 feet in front of the Commonwealth's Attorney's Office using up about six parking spaces.

Councilwoman Reba McClanan said that something more would have to be spent to make the building look presentable. The Civic Center is in a preservation zone.

"It looks like we're going to have a 2½-year eyesore in the midst of all this expensive Williamsburg architecture," remarked Councilman Robert G. Jones.

Grochmal said that an architect has been commissioned to make an overall study of space needs at the civic center. This will take one year.

"There's no way we can know how many judges the General Assembly will appoint," said McClanan.

Muehlenbeck said that the city has other space needs, even on a temporary basis.

Jennings, referring back to the empty courtrooms in the afternoon, said, "This afternoon session is done in other major cities in Virginia."

Heischberger said that he sees no problem in looking at the courthouse use and Grochmal said he would ask the consultant to consider this in his overall plan.

Overman attended Virginia Military Institute and graduated from Virginia Commonwealth University with a bachelor of science degree in Sociology/Law Enforcement. He holds a master's degree in Administration of Justice Management from Nova University, and attended the Graduate School of Public Administration at Old Dominion University.

"Studies of our jail system in Virginia Beach have shown that we lack a sound planning policy, that our deputies lack law enforcement training, and that jail security is lax," said Overman.

"In a city our size, with all the other modern, effective governmental administrative systems in place, the Sheriff's Department must be brought up to a higher standard."

Overman was endorsed in his candidacy by Alvin "Sally" Rodgers, the candidate who opposed Smith four years ago, losing by less than 3,000 votes out of over 49,500 cast.

Cooperative Education is one program which illustrates the relationship between Tidewater Community College and the community. Through the cooperation of community business leaders who employ nearby in a 17th century stone house. Ursula, the antithesis of Justin's family, was sophisticated, well traveled, and lived a life that Justin had only dreamed of. Ursula found Justin interesting too, just as a sculptor finds a piece of clay or a block of marble interesting. Justin was something to be molded, instructed, and ultimately admired.

TCC Co-op students, the College is able to graduate students with real on-the-job experience, making them aware of what to expect from their careers. In turn, these graduates go on to become reliable, satisfied employees due to experience gained through their participation in Cooperative Education.

In the meantime, Justin battled with her mother, who had decided to become a martyr and her aunt, and whose sole interest seemed to be social climbing. Only when Justin was with Ursula, or alone at a deserted farmhouse, was she happy. The destruction of the farmhouse resulted in a tragic series of events, which brought to light Ursula's darker side and forced Justin to reexamine the dreams she had for her life.

Godwin's ability to create many levels in these characters and to contrast the perception of the 40 year old woman with that of the 14 year old girl, is one of the reasons why this novel succeeds. It should provide the reader with several memorable and thought-provoking experiences.—Lohman performance. These children were confident and enthusiastic when challenged to learn the teeter board. As each girl waited patiently but nervously to be strapped into the belt, words of encouragement were shouted to the teammate on the board. As each individual attempted jumps and flips, squeals of laughter and delight filled the arena. Ooh's Ah's and smiles were everywhere.

Also on the program are Clock and Dresden Figures, which features five young dancers and C. Leslie Caulfield as piano soloist.

Jeanne Henshel, with the Gymstrada School, said the gymnasts were trained in strength, flexibility, and gymnastic skills. The girls ranged in age from 8-17, and they practiced three days a week for a total of 9-12 hours weekly. Because of the time put in, Gymstrada boasts having eight girls on the United States Association of Independent Gymnastic Clubs National Junior Elite Team.

Both of these groups of children were invited to the circus by Sue Rowand, publicist for The Ringling Bros. and Barnum Bailey Circus.

physicians."

Councilwoman Reba McClanan also questioned the wisdom of starting a program paying physicians. She said that the obstetricians are one category of physicians requesting payment now. Any other category can do the same thing. "I find the whole thing offensive."

Councilman John A. Baum pointed out that many hospitals are getting into profit making. "The whole business of health care bothers me...we have a hop and skip system now."

Rivera pointed out that the allocation was merely an interim solution.

"We are as concerned as you are," Dr. Knispel said, "All of us take care of people who cannot pay, at the city clinic, at the office, in the emergency room. You have already taken on some responsibility by having originated the obstetrical clinic, the end of which you have not provided for."

The clinic takes the patients up to delivery, but from there no provision has been made.

The hospital has 37.4 births that involve indigent patients per month which is 25 percent of the total birth. However, Dr. Knispel said, this number is expected to double.

Also, he said, each medical resident costs the hospital $35,000. Richmond and Charlottesville, he said, receive more money from the state for indigent care.

Councilman Robert Jones said that he did not think that someone making $20,000 a year is indigent.

"Basically, I object to the total concept," he said. He asked about indigents who need radiology, blood work and emergency room care. He said the city could be establishing a far-reaching precedent.

"You're talking about socialized medicine. We're not doing that," said Dr. McCoy.

Councilman John A. Baum accused Council members of filibustering. He said more compassion should be shown. The program is not much different from the midwife program which Council already approved.

Marks named new Arts Center director

VIRGINIA BEACH—The Board of Trustees for the Virginia Beach Arts Center recently announced the appointment of Michael J. Marks of Norfolk as executive director for the Arts Center.

Board member Barbara Fleming, who served as secretary on the 15-member search committee, described Marks as "A gifted administrator who is adept at motivating people. He is very creative and has expertise in not-for-profit organizations. We feel he will greatly enhance the breath of the Arts Center's efficiency in serving the Tidewater area."

Marks was chosen from a field of 68 applicants. A native of Kentucky, he has lived in the area since 1971. Most recently, he served as chief executive officer for the Leukemia Society of America, serving both Virginia and West Virginia from a Hampton-based office. Prior to that, Marks was the regional coordinator for the Muscular Dystrophy Association in Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Baby athletes convene at Pembroke Mall

VIRGINIA BEACH—Imagine, if you will, tiny round athletes working out, flexing their tubular forms, applying vast quantities of baby oil to their rotund forms... in short, getting ready to go for the gold in the Baby Olympics set for 11 a.m. this Saturday at Pembroke Mall.

And the competition appears to be fierce, including such endurance contests for athletes ranging from birth to two years old as the Crawling Race, the Longest Walk, the Toy Pulling Contest, Toy Assembly (?), the Tunnel Crawl and the Photo Contest (snapshots please).

It's all in fun and it's part of Child Awareness Week, a joint presentation of the Pembroke Mall Merchants Association and the Children's Hospital of The King's Daughters, including displays, educational opportunities and just plain fun.

"And it isn't all just for the kids," said Phyllis Skolnick, marketing director for the mall. "All week long we have had a Silent Auction going. Council approves $ for thought processing

By Lee Cahill

VIRGINIA BEACH—City Council has taken a step toward smoothing the way to getting its thought on paper.

Monday afternoon by a vote of 8-1 Council approved a $4,943 expenditure for "thought processing" equipment which will give Council members a direct line to the City Clerk's Office and the transmission of their thoughts to paper. Councilwoman Barbara Henley dissented.

The money will be used to purchase equipment which will permit Council members to call in their messages to the City Clerk's office during and outside of office hours. The dictation will be transcribed by the clerk's staff. The equipment will be furnished by the Lanier Company.

Councilman John A. Baum remarked, "We certainly need our thoughts processed." He noted that in Fairfax, Council members have a staff of four to six and an office. He wasn't recommending that size staff, but Baum said the Lanier equipment would be taking a step in the right direction.

Salem Road considered

By Lee Cahill

VIRGINIA BEACH—Salem Road is a road whose "day will come."

Councilman Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr. said Monday afternoon that although he could not say when the road will be improved to a 66-foot right-of-way (from 30 feet), "the day will come."

The project is not in the current five-year Capital Plan. However, Council estimated that the project should be in the Plan within 20 years.

Accordingly, Vice Mayor Reba McClanahan in a motion to approve a conditional use permit placed a 20-year limit on a stipulation that the applicant reserve a right-of-way along the front of Salem Road 47 feet from the center line of the existing right-of-way.

The permit was granted to the Garden of the Pines Pet Memorial, Inc., which plans to build an addition to its pet cemetery on a 14.61-acre parcel on the west side of Salem Road, south of Landstown Road.

"We might be more confident (that the road would be built) if the bond referendum passes," commented Councilman Robert G. Jones, referring to the referendum on roads, schools, water and sewer and a jail addition on the next day.

Back Bay plan okay

By Lee Cahill

VIRGINIA BEACH—City Council has adopted the Management Plan for the Back Bay Watershed and has directed City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck to prepare a program of implementation.

The plan had its origin in the appointment in February 1, 1982 of the Mayor's Back Bay Study Committee comprised of Councilwoman Barbara Henley, Councilman John A. Baum and Public Works Director C. Oral Lambert Jr. Subsequently a study was made by a private consulting firm which prepared the plan.

According to the resolution passed Monday afternoon adopting the plan, the plan is intended "to serve in conjunction with the Comprehensive Plan to manage public and private actions within a coordinated and comprehensive framework."

The resolution recognizes that the Back Bay Watershed is now experiencing the impacts of urbanization upon its natural ecosystem and intrinsic rural character.

Resort strip needs trees report to Council says

By Lee Cahill

VIRGINIA BEACH—The greening of Atlantic Avenue would set the stage for upgrading the resort strip under a program recommended by consultants for the Atlantic Avenue Beautification Project.

In the third of the five stages scheduled in the consultants' report it is noted that "a summer resort without trees is a conflict of terms."

The $56,000 study is being prepared by Mickiewicz-Robertson & Associates, Ltd., in association with Howard, Needles, Tammen Bergendoff, Rouse-Sirine Associates, Ltd., and Zion & Breen Associates, Inc.

Cost estimates will be presented at the fourth stage of the report, according to John Robertson of Mickiewicz-Robertson. Recommendations, including the area from Rudee Inlet to 40th Street, made at a recent City Council work session, included:

- A second crossing of Rudee Inlet (General Booth Boulevard).
- Making Atlantic Avenue one-way three lanes northbound south of 31st Street and two lanes northbound and one lane southbound north of 31st Street.
- Increasing the sidewalk width on the west side of Atlantic to 31 feet, with 12 feet on the east side for the area south of 25th Street, and to 15 feet on the west side with eight feet on the east side north of 25th Street.
- Introducing on the wider walkway trees, benches, drinking fountains, banners, and sheltered bus stops.
- A canopied walkway on the Area band album to benefit scholars

VIRGINIA BEACH—K94, McDonalds and Audio Light and Musical recently announced "McRhythm", an album project being put together to benefit the United Negro College Fund. The album will be completely local. Area bands and musicians will enter their own songs by April 8. The initial judging of these songs will be done by K94 air personalities. The entries will be narrowed down to semifinalists, who will be judged by a number of members of the local music industry.

Radio station WMYK-94 will also get audience feedback on the semifinalists with a special program featuring the entries on Sunday, April 14. Winners will be announced sometime within the following week.

The album design is also a contest. Entries for the album artwork will be judged and the winner selected during the same time period.

Out of the ten finalists chosen to be on the "McRhythm" album, there will be one band/musician chosen as tops. They will receive a five thousand dollar Fender Rhodes Chrome Keyboard from Audio Light and Musical.

The "McRhythm" album will be mixed and mastered at Master Sound in Virginia Beach. "McRhythm" is scheduled to go on sale Labor Day weekend in all McDonalds stores and retail record outlets. The album will sell for $5 and all proceeds will benefit the United Negro College Fund.

Textbooks recommended for adoption

VIRGINIA BEACH—New textbooks recommended for adoption for use in the public schools of Virginia Beach are on display at several locations throughout the city. Texts to be used in a number of subject areas were under consideration during this school year.

On the secondary level, mathematics, computer science, and science textbooks have been recommended.

The texts will be on display at each of the five branches of the Virginia Beach Public Library through April 16. In addition, the books will be on display at the School Administration Building at Princess Anne until the day of the regular School Board meeting, Tuesday, April 16, at 2 p.m.

During the meeting, the School Board will take action on the adoption of the recommended textbooks. Should the recommendation of the Department of Instructional Planning and Development Services be accepted, the texts will be adopted.

ted and the texts adopted, they will go into usage in the fall of this year.

All of the books recommended for adoption were proposed by curriculum committees of the individual subject areas, following through review of each text by teachers in those subject areas throughout the school division. The curriculum committees, which are comprised of parents, teachers, students, and school administrators, meet on a regular basis during the school year.

State Board of Education procedures for the adoption of textbooks have been strictly followed in the selection of the recommended texts. In each case, the Virginia Beach Public Schools Department of Instructional Planning and Development Services recommends to the School Board the committee's first choice for adoption. During the adoption period, the books will be routinely reviewed and evaluated often.

School budget request reduced

SCHOOL BEACH—The 1985-86 Virginia Beach Public Schools operating budget, approved March 13 by the School Board, has been reduced by $1,104,000. The budget now calls for $161,708,883 to run the public school division next year.

The reduction was caused by the removal from the operating budget of roofing repair jobs to seven schools. City Council originally had directed that any repair or improvement projects costing $250,000 or less be included in the operating budget. City Council has since directed that these repairs, regardless of cost, should be included in the city's capital improvement program and not in the school division's operating budget.

The change in funding status will not affect the priority of repairing the roofs of the seven schools; in effect, the change is a bookkeeping procedure.

Flea market to benefit VWC

NORFOLK/VA. BEACH — The Women of Wesleyan are establishing a $10,000 scholarship at Virginia Wesleyan College this year and hope to raise $5,000 towards this project through its 15th Annual Flea Market set for Saturday, March 30.

Women of Wesleyan is a volunteer support organization of Virginia Wesleyan College. The group has been responsible for raising over $51,717 for the college. The funds have been used to purchase library books, picnic tables, new furniture for student lounges, and other equipment.

The Flea Market will be held in Cunningham Gymnasium, located on the college campus, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Booth spaces are still available for rent at $20 each. All profits from sales go to the space holders.

Admission to the market will be 50 cents per person, and sandwiches and drinks will be available.

Reservations for booth spaces may be made by calling 423-0408 or 461-3232, extension 287. A number of tables, eight-feet in length, are available at $5 per table.

Penny for Council's thoughts?

has the services of a secretary and the use of an office. Other Council members make do. They use the services of the Clerk's Office but are limited to office hours. Also they have no work area in City Hall.

As a result, many Council members use the services of their office staff, if they have a staff, or have to find other ways to do their paper work.

The city's research department in a telephone survey of 11 localities found that although the city clerk's office provides for the secretarial/clerical needs of council members in six of the 11 localities surveyed there appears to be no universal procedure for providing clerical support to members of city councils or county boards.

Of the 11 localities surveyed, six provide clerical/secretarial support (Charlottesville, Chesapeake, Hampton, Newport News, Portsmouth and Roanoke) to members of city council on a routine basis.

Baum asked why the equipment Chesapeake is planning to purchase costs only $1300.

The Chesapeake clerk's office has budgeted approximately $1,700 for a Lanier Messenger, approximately $1,300 for the base unit and $400 for an interface which is a 24-hour transcription device that holds up to four microcassettes. The cost does not include the cost of cassettes.

City Clerk Ruth Smith said that the Chesapeake equipment permits only 90 minutes of dictation while the Virginia Beach equipment will provide 12 hours and includes additional transcribers, maintenance for a year, and other advantages.

The Beach had used the Messenger equipment on trial and found that Council members found the time used up when they tried to call.

"Does this mean we're more verbose than other Councils?" commented Councilwoman Nancy Creech.

Chamber unveils new medallion

The Hampton Roads medallion, created for the Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce, has been selected as the most outstanding sample of metal striking in the U.S. and many other parts of the world.

It won first place for Achievement in Metal Striking from the Specialty Advertising Association International.

This distinguished award was presented at the 3000-member organization's annual meeting in Dallas last month to the medallion's creator and designer, Randolph Bruce of Carran and Company, Virginia Beach.

Carran produced the medallion last spring to commemorate the founding of the Chamber, formed by the consolidation of independent chambers in the five area cities.

The highly-detailed medallion depicts much of the heritage of the five cities. The 22 features on the relief sculpture range from the Norfolk azalea to the Suffolk peanut. Each medallion comes with a printed legend describing the features. On the award-winning piece prepared especially for the judging, the Hampton Roads design was backed by a relief of the U.S.S. South Carolina.

"When Carran and Company presented the idea for the medallion," said HRCC President Bill J. Center, "we thought it would be an excellent way to celebrate our beginning as the Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce. It seemed to be an appropriate commemorative piece."

The medallions are one-quarter-inch thick and three inches in diameter and were struck in solid bronze, nickel-silver and copper by Medalcraft, Inc. of Green Bay, Wisconsin, the company chosen to strike Olympic medals for the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

The Hampton Roads medallion may be mounted on wooden plaques, presented in velvet-lined boxes, hung from a keychain or made part of a desk or table clock. The solid bronze medallions were sold to charter members only through the HRCC.

Non-Chamber members may purchase the nickel-silver medallions at any of Spertner Jewelers' three locations.

"We have been pleased with the favorable response to the Hampton Roads medallion," said Bruce, who is co-owner with his wife, Carolyn, of Carran and Company.

The firm has also created and designed three other medallions in the Great American Naval Ship Series, of which the U.S.S. South Carolina was one. These medallions depict the United States ships Independence, Nassau and Yorktown.

The Yorktown medallion is being struck for the first time this month. In addition, medallions have been produced for two naval shore facilities, the Shore Intermediate Maintenance Activity, Norfolk, and the Naval Dental Clinic.

"Each medallion is designed with the cooperation of the ship or shore facility personnel," Bruce said.

Carran and Company is a six-year-old advertising, marketing and design firm. The principals, Randolph and Carolyn Bruce, have been actively working in the advertising field in Hampton Roads for more than 17 years.

NORFOLK—Hess's Department Stores, Inc., of Allentown, PA, has appointed Seamark, Inc., and Wheeler Communications, Inc., as its advertising and public relations agencies in Virginia.

Hess's, the nation's 38th largest department store chain, recently opened five stores in Hampton Roads under the Hess's Rices Nachmans name.

Seamark and WheelerCom assisted Hess's on the successful grand opening of the stores, which Hess's President Irwin Greenberg described as "The most spectacular feat ever accomplished by Hess's in its 88-year history."

Fred Bentelspacher, Hess's vice president of sales promotion, said, "Hess's is extremely pleased with its fantastic start in Hampton Roads and is pleased to be associated with Seamark and WheelerCom. We look forward to a continuing successful team as we grow in Virginia."

Thomas F. Bie, chairman and CEO of Seamark, said, "We are very impressed with the Hess's organization and are enjoying working with them. They represent an exceptional combination of sound management and planning, and innovative marketing and promotion."

Portsmouth approves Garcia project

PORTSMOUTH—A proposal for joint development of a 137-acre waterfront tract with Virginia Beach developer Edward S. Garcia has been approved by the Portsmouth city council.

With little discussion of Garcia's plans for housing and the city's proposed corporate office park on the property near the West Norfolk Bridge, the council, authorized City Manager George L. Hanbury to sign a contract with Garcia to put a road, utility lines and a sewerage pumping station on the site.

The city will share the cost of this work with Garcia, and in return will receive the right to develop 50 acres of the parcel into sites to be sold to companies for research centers and regional headquarters.

The city, however, will not be bound by the agreement until the council approves zoning for both the residential and office developments and appropriates the approximately $1.1 million the city must put up to get the project going.

The council called a special joint hearing with the Planning Commission April 9 to consider the residential and office zones that would be required for the property, which is now zoned for factories. The property, which was part of the estate of Fred W. Beasley until purchased by Garcia last year, is on the Western Branch of the Elizabeth River.

The corporate office park would generate about $58 million in development, while residential construction undertaken by Garcia and other developers on the rest of the property would bring the total investment to $115 million.

The residential projects planned include apartments, townhouses, luxury condominiums and a housing complex for the elderly.

The city would pay Garcia $11,500 per acre for land, but only as the land was developed and sold to the final users, at prices of up to $30,000 per acre.

For the project to proceed, the contract must also be approved by the Portsmouth Industrial Development Authority.

When the price is right

By Doris Moxley
Dean Whittier Reynolds, Inc.
Hampton Roads

Some of the most successful and astute investors in the stock market preach the old-fashioned gospel of buying only "when the price is right." Their definition of the "right price" is when the stock they buy is sold at a discount to its true value and therefore has a low price/earnings multiple. For these "contrarians" (definition: doing opposite to what is popular), a bargain stock is one issued by medium or large-sized companies listed on the NY Stock Exchange or larger companies on the American Stock Exchange or traded over-the-counter. They reason that larger companies are usually subject to less accounting gimmickry than smaller ones, an added measure of protection. Too, the larger and medium-sized companies are much more in the public eye and therefore easier to watch.

David Dremann, author of the New Contrarian Investment Strategy advocates buying a portfolio of low P/E stocks and weeding it out periodically as stocks move up to the market P/E multiple. For example, if the market multiple is 10, then as a bargain-priced stock moves up toward that average number, it should probably be sold and another bargain low P/E stock found to replace it. If a low P/E stock is bought with the expectation that it will begin to move up, if, within certain time frame, it stays unpopular and therefore continues to be under-priced, he advocates taking a hard look, doing a reassessment and perhaps selling it in order to find one that will be more rewarding.

The question naturally arises as to how the average investor finds these undervalued gems. He can seek out a contrarian investment advisor who specializes in the low P/E field. Or he can get lists of low P/E stocks on his own from brokerage firms, advisory services and financial publications. The Value Line survey, for example, runs weekly lists of high-yielding stocks with P/E ratios under 5. Financial Weekly (box 26, Richmond, VA, 23201, phone 804-649-6586) lists all the P/E declines for all stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange and over-the-counter. However, by a simple rule of thumb you can ferret them out for yourself. First, take a broad market index, such as the S&P 500, for which the P/E ratio for the latest twelve-months earnings can easily be found in the Wall Street Journal at the local library. The current ratio, for example, is 9.5. Next pick well-established companies paying good dividends and trading below this multiple by at least 20 percent. The deeper the discount from the S&P 500 the further down you are moving in the low P/E range.

The more of a discount to the true value of a company the stock sells for, the more likely you are to have a better than average return. In fact, many well-done research studies have shown that buying low P/E stocks would have provided above-average returns over the last forty years. Although many sophisticated investors have viewed the results of these studies, many obviously do not believe them. Those skeptics continue to buy over-priced stocks with high P/E ratios which have historically not been as good to the average investor as the low P/E stocks.

Lawn & Garden

In the flower garden

By Jay Means

McDonald Garden Center

If you're looking for some colorful additions to your early spring flower bed, try cold resistant annuals. Cold resistant is a term used to describe those first annuals we can plant in early spring. They will survive our nippy autumn days, and can also be used for winter plantings here in Tidewater.

Heading the list are Pansies. They are hardy and available in early spring in much of the country - even ready for late fall planting in our Tidewater climate. Pansies come in a wide range of colors, from clear pastels to rich, dark tones. They come in single colors, with blotched faces and even tri-colors. For a little more variety try Johnny Jump-Ups. They have smaller faces, but offer a profusion of blooms. They even come back each year.

Snapdragons also resist cold well and will begin to provide their colorful spikes early in the gardening season. Regarded as annuals in cool climates, snaps will perform as tender perennials in our milder climate.

Along with these cold resistant annuals, now's the time to make room for a perennial or two in your garden. Today, in our fast-paced world, it's nice when you only have to do things once. That's how perennial gardening is. You only have to plant them once and they come back each year with a display of color. Here are a few you may want to try this spring:

- Candytuft - compact growing, producing flat clusters of white flowers in mid-spring. Great for bed borders and edging.
- Columbine - produce star-shaped flowers with long spires in a wide range of pastel colors, pink, red, lavender, yellow and white from mid- to late spring.
- Shasta Daisies - showy early summer flowering with large, single or double white blooms borne on long stems.
- Creeping Phlox - dwarf, low growing producing showy masses of small flowers. Available in white, blue, and pink. Blooming early spring.
- Foxglove - striking, tall-growing plants for background planting. Blooms in wide range of colors. Summer blooming, good for cut flowers.

The right seed

By Jay Means

McDonald Garden Center

Spring lawn care begins in March with a soil test to check your soil's pH. An ideal soil pH range is from 6.5 to 7.0. Most Tidewater soils tend to be on the acid side of the scale. A pH test can easily be done today with a small soil test kit available at our garden centers. But chances are if you haven't applied lime (which raises pH), for three years or longer, you're probably due for an application. Generally, a rate of approximately 80-100 lbs. of ground dolomitic limestone per 1,000 sq. ft. of lawn area is adequate for right now.

If you're establishing a new lawn this spring or just over-seeding an established one, March is the time for seeding. Kentucky 31 fescue is probably the best known type of seed being used today, but there is a whole new family of hybrid fescues that are being introduced that are quickly gaining in popularity.

These new hybrids basically have many of the same characteristics in common, making them superior to Kentucky 31. They have a finer leaf texture and an attractive moderate green color. They are more disease resistant and drought tolerant, as well as being more heat resistant. All of these features make these new hybrids better suited to our Tidewater climate.

McDonald Garden Centers offers a special mixture of the best varieties of these new hybrid fescues. This mixture offers several benefits over a single-variety lawn. Most importantly, a mixture is much less susceptible to disease which could wipe out a mono-stand (a one-variety lawn). You also get excellent year round color and all varieties are quite compatible in texture. We recommend a seeding rate of 5 lbs. per 1,000 sq. ft. on new lawns and 2 1/2 lbs. per 1,000 sq. ft. for overseeding established lawns. If establishing a new lawn, go ahead and fertilize with McDonald Lawn Food at time of seeding. For established lawns wait until May to fertilize. Try the McDonald Grass Seed Mixture this spring and enjoy your lawn all year long.

Award-winning vegetables

By Patrick Denton
Copley News Service

I found it very interesting recently to look down a list of All-America Selections' award-winning vegetables still on the market. Among them, I found many of our own family favorites.

It struck me, too, that such a list would be an excellent guide to choosing good varieties for our 1985 gardens, for these winners represent the very best in their class - the tastiest, most productive and pest-resistant, the most space-efficient and beautiful among vegetables of their kind. Of all the past award-winning vegetables, the edible potted pea Sugar Snap has proved by far the most popular. And now there is Sugar Ann, an earlier, short-vined version of Sugar Snap. The runner-up in popularity among past All-America winners is Green Comet, my own personal favorite early broccoli.

Each year, though, I try other, newer varieties of broccoli. I maintain a planting of Green Comet for a reliable early crop, and I usually make a second sowing in late spring or early summer for a fall crop. Green Comet produces good-size shoots after the main head is picked, and continues for weeks, until a hard frost.

If you're looking for an extra-sweet and juicy cucumber that's easy to grow, try Sweet Success, a 1983 winner. It's proven my easiest, most productive good quality cucumber in the past three years in our garden.

Probably one of the greatest developments in lettuce came with the 1952 award-winning leaf lettuce, Salad Bowl. This is the leaf lettuce par excellence for the home garden. It is most beautiful, forming a perfect rosette of closely-set, highly decorative deeply laced leaves that stay sweet, tender and crisp on vigorous plants all summer.

Another All-America winner is Buttercrunch, generally considered the highest quality butterhead lettuce ever created. Its leaves are thick and juicy, the head small, compact and heavy.

A third award-winning lettuce, and one of my favorites, is Ruby, a real beauty with heavily frilled wavy leaves shaded intensely with red. This is a beautifully formed, rather upright leaf lettuce that is a delight to both eye and palate. And this year brings us the award-winning red lettuce, Red Sails.

Among sweet peppers, the 1981 winner, Gypsy, is one I've grown each year since I received trial seeds in 1980. Unlike most other sweet peppers in cool summer climates, Gypsy is a reliable producer of thick-walled, juicy, sweet fruits.

The pumpkins we grow each year are Spirit, a 1977 winner, again because they reliably produce, on space-saving vines, two to three perfectly shaped fruits per plant. The fruits are an ideal size for jack-o'-lanterns and the flesh makes delicious pies.

Melody, another 1977 winner, has been the best spinach each year so far in our garden. Each plant produces masses of lush, deep-green, thick and tasty leaves. I like Melody best in spinach salads, though often we steam the freshly washed and chopped leaves over a thin layer of oil seasoned with garlic.

My two favorite zucchini varieties are All-America award winners. They are Gold Rush and Greyzini. Greyzini is gray-green, and the best-tasting zucchini ever. Gold Rush has a waxy, bright golden skin and drier texture than other zucchinis, which makes it the best one for frying.

Last year's award-winning tomato, Celebrity, is a variety I also can heartily recommend. Trial seeds grown in my own and friends' gardens have consistently produced robust bushes that bear reliable, heavy crops of extraordinarily tasty fruits.

Because of its strong, compact growth, Celebrity may be grown as a bush, cage or short stake tomato.

Garden planning

Home vegetable gardeners can get more out of their garden if they plan for successive plantings.

Different popular vegetables reach maturity at different times, said Virginia Tech Extension home horticulturist, Diane Relf. A good garden plan will include growing two successive crops in the same space - an early maturing vegetable such as lettuce followed by a late-maturing beet.

Examples of early crops that can be followed by others are onion sets, early beets, mustard, early turnips, early carrots, spinach, early corn and early cabbage. Crops which may follow others are late beets, late peas, Brussels sprouts, cauliflower, endive, turnips, late cabbage and spinach.

Staggered planting is another technique to try, said Ms. Relf, a member of the faculty of Virginia Tech's College of Agriculture and Life Sciences. Instead of growing plants in rows, the plants can be evenly spaced so that when they mature, their leaves will just barely touch adjacent plant leaves.

Vertical planting is suitable for certain vegetables. Plants growing up a trellis, stake, pole, fence or wire cage take up less space than when they are allowed to lie on the ground. Some peas and pole beans will climb by themselves. Cucumbers, melons, squashes and tomatoes can be encouraged to climb by tying them up the support.

Intercropping, or using the space between maturing crops, is another way to increase harvest, said Ms. Relf. Plant a fast and slow growing crop such as radishes and carrots in close rows. Radishes grow quickly and will be harvested before they compete with the carrots.

The specialist had one word of caution about using these intensive techniques. Be sure there is adequate moisture and nutrients available so that the vegetables will be able to produce an abundant harvest.

A couple of years ago, Ms. Relf and her students planted an intensive garden in a 10-by-20-foot plot. The garden area was laid out to minimize the space used for walkways and maximize the total growing area. Cool season crops were started indoors in March and later grown outdoors. The entire garden was tiled and planted in early April, with the first major harvest of lettuce, onions, pak choi, radishes, spinach and turnip greens, harvested in late May.

Mid-season crops of tomatoes and peppers were planted in May, though they required protection in chilly weather.

The fall garden was started in July with broccoli, Chinese cabbage, cos lettuce, spinach and radishes. The tomatoes and peppers continued to produce until killed by frost.

With good planning, even this small area was able to produce abundant crops.

Mulch to avoid weeds

Mulching is one way to avoid weeding chores. A good mulch will save labor and time and almost eliminate weeds.

Also, mulches have the added benefit of helping to conserve soil moisture, prevent erosion, and keep the fruits of crops such as tomatoes, cucumbers and melons clean.

Any organic mulch - hay straw and leaves - is especially desirable on light sandy or heavy clay soils. Mulches improve the water holding capacity of light sandy soils and with clay soils they tend to reduce soil compaction.

Apply mulch after the plants are four to six inches tall. Before applying organic mulch, remove all weeds and then spread the material evenly between the plants to a depth of one to six inches. Do it when there is reasonably good soil moisture and do it before the weather turns hot in the summer.

Inorganic mulches, such as black plastic and paper, are put down on the soil before planting. The land should be completely prepared for planting and have a high moisture level before the material is placed over it. Place the material over the row to be planted, then bury the edges to prevent it from blowing away. Cut slits for the seeds or transplants and perhaps cut a few more slits to allow rainwater to infiltrate.

Black plastic film is a good mulch for vegetables since it adds about eight degrees of warmth to the soil temperature.

There are several other kinds of mulches used by home vegetable gardeners, depending on what they have available. Some use newspapers, aluminum coated plastic and foil.

Alternative to a 9 a.m. lunch

I'm one of those lucky people who has to start the workday at 7 a.m. Usually by 9 or 10 I'm starving and ready for lunch. It is not easy to find lunch this early so I decided to search and find a cure for my mid-morning hunger pangs.

I came up with an easy to make batter bread that you can change the taste of by using different kinds of nuts or dried fruits. You can even combine the two. It's fun, so use your imagination.

Brunch Batter Bread

2 cups of all-purpose white flour (sifted)
¼ cup sugar
3 teaspoons baking powder
¾ teaspoon salt
1 egg
1 cup milk
¼ teaspoon nutmeg or cinnamon
1 cup finely chopped nuts or dried fruit (or ½ cup of each)

Chow Line

By Julie Storeide

Combine the sifted flour, sugar, baking powder, nutmeg or cinnamon and salt, then sift together into a large bowl. Add the chopped nuts, and/or the dried fruit to the flour mixture. Beat the egg lightly. Mix the milk with the egg and add to the flour mixture. Stir quickly, just until all ingredients are well blended. Pour the batter into a well greased loaf pan. Bake for 45 minutes in a preheated 350° oven. Remove from pan and cool on a rack before serving. Makes one loaf.

locations along the street. Also, to conceal the parking at hotels, he recommended that three- to four-foot walls (six-foot walls also were mentioned) be built with plantings on each to conceal some of the harsher characteristics of the parking lots.

People should know when they're arriving at the beach. Therefore, Breen added, the main entrances to the Beach should be beautified and lined with trees, especially the entrance from the Expressway.

The report also proposes that all future buildings on the east side be designed so that the ground floors remain open to a large extent, permitting ocean view and admitting ocean breezes.

The entrance to Atlantic Avenue would be celebrated by "portals," landscaped areas or plazas built as the east-west streets narrow to one lane into Atlantic Avenue.

The report concludes that it would be an error to consider Atlantic Avenue in isolation, that the entire complex must be rejuvenated or the decline of Virginia Beach will continue.

Little Theater auditions set

The Little Theater of Virginia Beach will hold auditions for "Born Yesterday," a comedy by Garson Kamin, on April 1 and 2 at 7:30 p.m. The cast consists of 10 men and five women. A few parts are non-speaking, which will provide an opportunity for novice actors to gain stage experience. Auditions will take place at the theater, located at 24th Street and Barberton Drive. The play, to be directed by Mac McManus, will be presented weekends from May 17 through June 1. For further information, readers should call 481-1834.

Sunrise at Fort Story

The historic site for this traditional Easter Sunrise Service is the Cape Henry Memorial Cross which marks the approximate spot where the Jamestown colonists first touched Virginia on April 26, 1607.

The colonists had left England late in 1606 and spent the greater part of the next five months in the strait confines of three small ships; the largest, the Susan Constant, was only 75 feet long. It is small wonder, as George Percy related, that they were "almost ravished at the first sight" of their new surroundings. It is also understandable why they remained four days in the Cape Henry area before going on to establish the first permanent English settlement in America in Jamestown. On April 29 the colonists, possibly using English oak already fashioned for the purpose, "set up a Crose at Chesupic Bay, and named that place Cape Henry" for Henry, Prince of Wales, oldest son of King James I. Here on the windswept shore, led by their Chaplain, Robert Hunt, they must have knelt in prayer and thanksgiving for this new land and their safe voyage.

In 1935, the present large granite cross and a low stone wall were erected by the Daughters of the American Colonists. Because of the continuing erosion of the shoreline through the years, the cross had to be relocated inland for protection. In November, 1981, a new foundation was built approximately 300 yards southwest of the original site and the cross was emplaced on November 6, 1981.
